Handy Shortwave Chart
Bill McFadden
billmc@agora.rdrop.com

Band allocations and time zone conversions for the USA. Includes broadcast bands used outside the USA. For multi-use bands, primary usage is shown. Some stations operate outside official bands. Information is from Oct 2005 FCC rules and Jan 2006 NTIA manual, see Chapter 4 of:
http://www.ntia.doc.gov/osmhome/redbook/redbook.html

Please e-mail suggestions and corrections to billmc@agora.rdrop.com.

Phone line as SW antenna
Bill McFadden
billmc@agora.rdrop.com

Changes preceded by "|".

WARNINGS AND DISCLAIMERS

Connecting unapproved devices to phone lines may be illegal in your area. Telephone lines present a potential shock hazard. Do not use this antenna for transmitting. Use at your own risk.

INTRODUCTION

This article describes how to use a phone line as a shortwave receiving antenna. Performance will vary depending on the kind of phone line you have. Overhead lines usually make okay antennas, while underground lines
| usually don't. Phone lines carrying DSL service may be unsuitable because
| DSL operates over a wide spectrum. A phone line antenna will generally pick up more power line noise than a dedicated antenna, so don't expect to | use it for DX work. Nevertheless, I found that it outperformed the
| telescopic whip antennas built into many portables.

A reader sent in this suggestion: If you're concerned about connecting the phone line directly to the receiver, try wrapping the phone cord several times around the receiver's telescopic whip antenna instead. Performance may not be as good as a direct connection, but it will probably be better than the whip antenna by itself.

Someone else wrote asking about lightning protection. I haven't thought much about it because thunderstorms are rare in my area. Most phone lines have lightning arrestors on them where they enter the house, but the lightning arrestors may pass enough energy during a lightning strike damage a receiver. My suggestion is to disconnect the antenna when not in use if you experience frequent thunderstorms.

HOW TO DO IT

The simplest connection is a single capacitor between the phone line and receiver. The capacitor eliminates all phone line voltages, including | ringing, so that they will not harm the receiver. The capacitor should
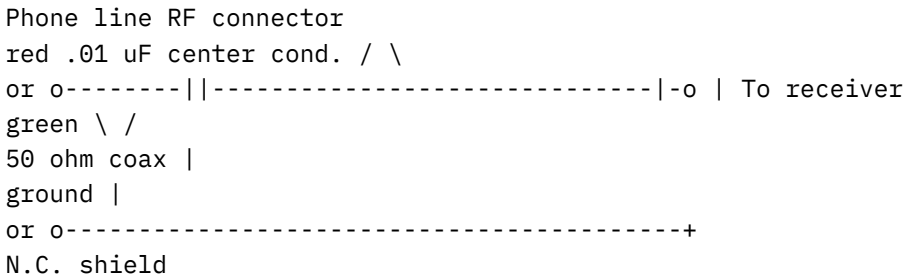
| be rated 250 volts or higher.



N.C. = no connect. I originally connected the phone line ground (yellow wire) to this terminal, but reception was better without it (if you do this, play it safe and put a .01 uF capacitor in series). If another ground is available, you can connect it to this terminal.

If you are picking up local AM or FM radio stations on the shortwave bands, it is likely that your receiver is overloaded. Inexpensive and portable receivers usually lack the filtering needed to eliminate this interference, but you can make your own filters. Filters can also be | purchased from shortwave dealers (see below for recommendations).

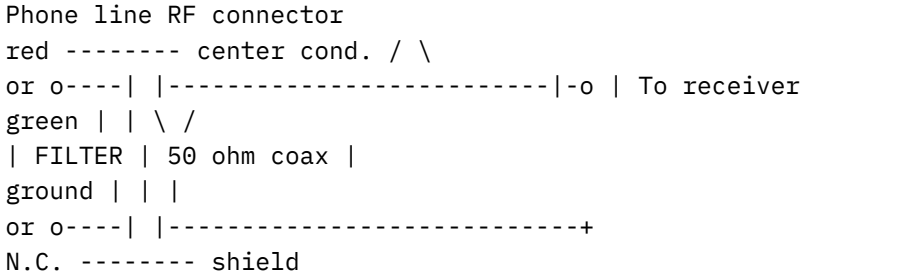
A high-pass filter can be used to remove signals below the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from local AM stations and presents a high impedance to the phone line at audio frequencies so that the phone line remains balanced.

A low-pass filter can be used to remove signals above the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from FM and TV stations, as well as VHF 2-way radio transmitters. If you use both filters, connect the output of the first filter to the input of the second (don't forget to connect their ground terminals together). It doesn't matter which filter is connected first.

These filters also work well with random wire antennas. Just connect the antenna in place of the phone line.

The filter(s) should be connected to the phone line in this manner:



| RECOMMENDED FILTERS
| If you don't want to make your own filters, the following have good | performance, are well-built and affordable:
| Model 400 BCB interference filter (3.5 MHz highpass)
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/filtersrf.html#bcb

| Model 420 HF lowpass filter (30 MHz lowpass)
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/filtersrf.html#3
| (scroll down a bit to see the model 420)
| If you have a random-wire antenna, the following unit will provide | impedance matching and lightning protection (connect antenna to 450-ohm | terminal):
| Model 182A beverage matching unit
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/reconly.html#Beverage Matching

FILTER PLANS

The original credit for the high-pass and low-pass filters goes to Paul Blumstein and John Shalamskas, respectively. Edited versions of their articles are included here:

Date: 09 Jan 91 00:54:08 GMT
From: paulb@harley.TTI.COM (Paul Blumstein)
Subject: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

The following ascii-schematic diagram is a high pass filter that will filter out Broadcast Band (MW) stations. I found it a great boon to my shortwave listening since local MW stations overload my ATS-803A front end & appear in SW, especially with a long antenna.

If you remember my antenna saga, I went from 50 feet to 150 feet & had overload problems causing me to cut back to 50 feet. (Even at 50 feet, I still have some MW interference). I took the advice of Gary Coffman and looked up filters in the ARRL Handbook. With the filter in place, I intend to try to increase my antenna length again.

Anywho, here is the filter, for interested parties.

--------||---+----||-----+----||-----------
} }
{ {
} }
-------------+-----------+-----------------

The outer capacitors are 1500 pf ceramic disks.
The inner capacitor is 820 pf ceramic disk.
The squiggly things are coils (two total). Each one is 2.7 uh.
(a close value will do).

From: bill@videovax.tv.tek.com (William K. McFadden)
Subject: Re: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

I built the filter that Paul Blumstein posted recently and measured it on a gain-phase analyzer. Here are its characteristics:

100 kHz -120dB
500 kHz -68dB

1000 kHz -38dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2100 kHz -3dB

The source and load impedances were 50 ohms. Because the filter has five elements, the attenuation is 30dB per octave. The measurements confirmed this.

This filter seems to be a good compromise between interference attenuation and passband response. There is very little attenuation in the 120m band and above. It could use a little more attenuation at the upper end of MW, which could be done with more stages or a higher cutoff frequency. Alternatively, you could build two of these filters and put them in series. (Since two 1500pF capacitors in series are really 750pF, you could eliminate one cap.)

Just for fun, I put 470 ohms in series with the input to see how the filter performed with an antenna mismatch. The response was:

100 kHz -105dB
500 kHz -60dB
1000 kHz -35dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2300 kHz -3dB

These figures are normalized to the passband response of -15dB, which is due to the impedance mismatch between the source and load and would have been there without the filter. Hence, the filter works almost as well in spite of the mismatch, which is good news to those who use long-wire antennas.

Subject: Construction of filters for SW reception

Several people have asked for construction details of the filters I built for my DX-440.

The high-pass filter helped some, but in my location the VHF/UHF broadcasters are also causing problems. So, I dug out the ARRL handbook and chose a 7-element Chebyshev low-pass design that is -3 dB at 35 MHz, -20 dB at 43 MHz, and -50 dB at 64 MHz (all calculated; it works well in practice!)

LOW-PASS FILTER (Rejects FM, TV, etc.)

chassis ground

I had to do a little more improvising at this point. I used .33 uH instead of .36, and .66 uH instead of .42, but it works fine.

The 5-lug terminal strips were perfect for these circuits, since there are 4 lugs plus a grounded lug. All "ground" connections go to the lug that is mounted to the chassis, and the other 4 lugs are used for each of the connections on the signal line. One terminal strip is used per filter. Since both filters were necessary to clean up the hash, I am going to put them both into one box when I get the time.

There is no difference between ends. They are "bilateral" which means you can't possibly hook them up backwards. (In the above schematics, left and right ends are interchangeable.)

COIL WINDING

You can make the coils yourself using this formula:

L = 0.2 * B^2 * N^2 / (3B + 9A + 10C)

L is the inductance, in uH
A is the length of the coil, in inches
B is the mean diameter of the coil, in inches
C is the diameter of the wire, in inches
N is the number of turns

For small wire, you can assume C = 0.

PARTS SOURCE

Parts for the filters can be obtained from the following source:

Best Buy is obviously trying to dump the Insignia, as there is no interest in digital radio outside some broadcasters. BTW - buy the Insignia and get free shipping, too! Some of the customer reviewers have stated they returned the portable the next day. This turkey is stuffed and cooked! I sent Struble an email pointing out the price reduction - of course, he never emailed back - thoughts@ibiquity.com

Car radio's with LW/MW or even AM are rare in Europe. I own a vintage Suzuki LJ80 that has MW, but that's a set from 1981 :)

Looka here, If that had happened in New Yawk City, Instantly, World Wide News! If I am lieing, I am dieing.

I don'ts likes riding in Helicopters at all!, or fixed wing Aircraft either! Sometimes I had to ride in Helicopters when I was in Vietnam, but I pretended I liked riding in Helicopters.The first time I rode in one of those Helicopters was when I went from Tan Son Nhut to Can Tho to have my paperwork processed.I was sitting on the floor with my legs dangling out the door.A big safety belt around my waist had me hooked to a D ring in the floor of that Helicopter.Scared the Sh.t out of me!
I just don't like to fly at all!

According to George Hayduke ~ Book Of Dirty Tricks,,, World War Two started in Germany, near the Polish Border.Germany dressed some German prisoners up in Polish uniforms and gave them Skopedal, (spelling, Skopedal).Then, Germany set the prisoners free and the prisoners commenced to attack the German prison.

World War Two Officially ended in 1951, or 1956, somewhere around that time frame.

"Stephenson's decision to leave now certainly looks like a no-confidence vote in the Zune's direction, if not the specific Zune HD model. Does the White House kitchen have granite counter tops? and also, (I Likes to use that word, also) does the White House have stainless steel kitchen appliances, and also, stainless steel accutrements? (Also)

The very best quality stainless steel is used in American nuke plants and American nuke power plants for American Military Ships and Submarines.The first Nuke Submarine built in the South (South is always Best) was built at Ingalls Shipbuilding in Pascagoula,Mississippi.At the American nuke power plants, they spray Orange Juice on the grounds/grass areas to help keep down nuke radiation.

Did George Bush ever wake up when 70% of Americans thought his policies sucked rottten eggs? You are nothing but a lying fearmongering hate-flame fanning demagogue. You and those like you are a discredit and disgrace to the party of Lincoln. Don't you get tired of it? Or is your ultimate goal to see hatred and fear achieve its logical conclusion?

The Republicans have an incredible propaganda machine. It's so fucking good and so deeply entrenched that they have 54% of Americans vehemently opposing something that doesn't even exist as a proposal. There is no such thing as "Obamacare." These people might as well be opposing letting Bigfoot run the nations healthcare. The Republicans have got half their own people believing that Obama has never produced a birth certificate, millions believing that the government is "Going to take over healthcare," millions still believing in Death Panels and millions firmly believing that Obama wants to take away everybody's guns. It's incredible the way right wing talk radio, Fox "News" and the rest of them have not just turned reality on its head, they've created an actual Alternate Universe where they can say literally anything they feel like saying (Glenn Beck is their most profligate manure spreader) and millions and millions of people will not only automatically believe it but they will show up at town hall meeting and scream bloody murder at anyone who attempts to tell them the facts. The Nazi analogies are way overdone but god damn, Goebbels would be proud of what Rush, Rupert and the gang have created. They have completely steamrolled objective reality because it was threatening to get somewhat in the way of corporate profits. These assholes have gotten people killed, they are hell bent on maintaining a failing healthcare system that will kill tens of thousands of Americans every year, they have been instrumental in starting unnecessary wars that cost trillions of dollars (trillions that they have successfully charged Obama with having spent), killed thousands of American soldiers and God only knows how many innocent civilians and they have no conscience about it at all. If they succeed in killing healthcare reform they won't give a moments thought to the people whose lives will be financially destroyed because of illness, or because they were abruptly dropped when they got sick because the insurance company knew they didn't have the resources to drag them into court and battle them for five or ten years. They won't give two shits about 47 million Americans who simply can't come up with the money for it. They'll just brag about what a great job they did on behalf of Aetna, Humana and Merck, they'll laugh and slap each other on the ass as people continue to die. Just lIke they did with Iraq.

All of our 75 million senior citizens tossed under the ObamaCare bus have one more reason to storm the town hall meetings. Once Obama's death panels get to work seniors won't live long enough to enjoy the energy savings they have been promised to break even from buying higher priced CFLs instead of using energy hog incandescent lightbulbs . Retailers like Lowes, Home Depot and Walmart will soon have Health and Human Services government mortality tables displayed in their lightbub aisles alongside info on lumens and lightbulb life.

I just got done watching a really interesting show on the "ID"
Channel.

It was called "Kennedy-Castro - The Secret History." I have seen every show
( I thought ) on the subject of the Cuban Missile Crisis or on the the Kennedy's for that matter. But apparently not or it was a new show.

I never had heard of the ABC journalist/reporter Lisa Howard before and it was a fascinating story on how she almost brought the two countries together.

It looked like she and Pres.Kennedy were literally within weeks/months to make that happen....and then of course he was assasinated.

I wonder if the U.S. will ever make amends with Cuba....or if this has even been thought of by the new administration. That country literally looks like it's frozen in the time of the 60's, pretty sad IMO.

Anyone have any opinion on the matter in response to ever lifting sanctions against Cuba? Just curious.

Sanctions? In reality we are one of the big traders with Cuba. And, virtually the rest of the world trades with Cuba. The 'sanctions' are merely a hoax used by the Casto 'tard boys.

Oh really? I really need to get caught up on things some time. For some reason, I had thought that we still basically didn't have much to do with them. {?}

Well, if we're giving them money and trading with them....there's no reason for their country to look like that. Someone is pocketing all the money and it isn't the people of Cuba...that's for sure.

Not now. It's still out of control. It was pretty hairy Saturday, but the wind shifted and we were spared. I'm on the other side of a river and a freeway from the San Gabriel Mountains. I am in the Sierra Pelonas foothills.

"The Problem Isn't Demand, It's Bandwidth"

"Should we all be concerned that the days of the 1,000-foot tower are gone and that anyone with a computer and an Internet connection is a possible new competitor? Will radio as we know it become just another feature of cell phones? Will in-car Internet give commuters millions of station choices? The answer is no. The problem for such platforms isn't consumer demand. It's bandwidth. In short, the greatest appeal of Internet radio remains its most fundamental problem: the requirement that every user have a separate, custom-per-user data stream. As long as this requirement remains, over-the-air radio need not be concerned about meaningful encroachment from the Internet."

http://tinyurl.com/l9722z

BUT:

"Multimedia Broadcast Multicast Service"

"Multimedia Broadcast Multicast Service (MBMS) is a broadcasting service that can be offered via existing GSM and UMTS cellular networks... MBMS uses multicast distribution in the core network instead of point-to-point links for each end device. MBMS will start to be rolled out in cellular networks during 2008 and gives the opportunity to broadcast TV, film, information such as free overnight transmissions of Newspapers in a digital form and other media in these networks. MBMS has the major benefits that the network infrastructure is already there for mobile network operators and the deployment can be cost effective compared with building a new network for the services. The broadcast capability enables to reach unlimited number of users with constant network load. Further it also enables the possibility to broadcast information simultaneously to many cellular subscribers for example emergency alerts... Cellular TV Broadcasting and MS will give the cellular service providers a very considerable return on their investment in 3G licences and will bring forward the launch of 4G."

Yeah Cuhlin, I have the big and smaller one.
I have about eight little 'tools' I carry on a

It's funny how useful those little tools have been good company, cheap prices, you never know when you'll need something like what they carry.

Here is the vid of the aviation mechanics key holder I have. I don't have the tweezers or pen on mine, I always have a pen in my pocket anyway.

I got the breacher bar maybe three or four months ago, this time I got the bigger one and grinded it down to a point and keep it in a kydex sheath.
I added on the parachord for the handle.

I Earned my P-38, it was given to me in boot camp at Fort Gordon,Georgia in 1962.The reason it is called P-38 is because it takes 38 clicks to open the average size C-Rations can. (C-Rats)
Of course, those P-38 Aircraft were Great too.

Speaking of Dog Tags,,, www.vietnamdogtags.com

The notch on some Dog Tags was for indexing them properly on the machines which were used for stamping the letters and numbers on the tags.

Doggy wears a little brass heart shaped Dog Tag on her collar.It says,,, 20 03
ANIMAL MEDICAL CENTER
995 SOUTH FRONTAGE ROAD
JACKSON,MS 39204
601 - 354 - 3622
019500

Doggy Earned her Dog Tag because I made sure she got all of the required vaccinations.

Indoctrination of school children is absolutely nothing new. I know for sure they did it when I was a kid (booing is communist, etc.) and what is requiring students to recite the Pledge of Allegiance if not political indoctrination?

That's why we have elections. When the Republicans have the White House then the kids have to listen to that president. What's the big deal?
As I recall JFK told me to exercise more and study science...the horror.

Ah, no, Dave. he's talking about the little can opener, we all carried in Nam. it came with the C's. i carried one on my car keys for years, back in the world. after the little clip, that keeps the claw in broke, i got bite in the leg too many times. it's with a few other P-38's, and some of the other crap i brought home. i still have my last Short-timer's calendar, and my stick. also have 25 or 30 ID coins.

(1) National health care will punish the insurance companies.

(2) National health care will "increase competition and keep insurance companies honest" -- as President Barack Obama has said.

(3) Insurance companies are denying legitimate claims because they are "villains."

(4) National health care will give Americans "basic consumer protections that will finally hold insurance companies accountable" -- as Barack Obama claimed in his op/ed in the Times.

(5) Government intervention is the only way to provide coverage for pre-existing conditions.

http://www.humanevents.com/article.php?id=33213

(6) There will be no rationing under national health care.

(7) National health care will reduce costs.

(8) National health care won't cover abortions.

http://www.humanevents.com/article.php?id=33300

(9) If you like Medicare, you'll love national health care, which will just extend Medicare's benefits to everyone.

(10) National health care won't cover illegal aliens -- as the president has twice claimed in recent radio appearances.

This post's root idea is that the USA is incompetent, and too stupid to reform health care, unlike other countries that have universal coverage.

On Sep 4, 3:58 pm, ∅baMa∅ Tse Dung <0bama0.spea...@gmail.com> wrote:

> (1) National health care will punish the insurance companies.

In terms of defining "punish", HR 676 would put them out of business, and HR 3200 would force them to compete.

No punitive punishment for taking people's money and then bankrupting them and/or letting them die. No.

> (2) National health care will "increase competition and keep insurance > companies honest" -- as President Barack Obama has said.

Oh, if that commie gay elitist non-white Muslim Kenyan said it, then of course them Libs is lappin it up!

> (3) Insurance companies are denying legitimate claims because they are > "villains."

Uh, no, because they want to profit. Plenty of folks around here never even heard of the word "recision" until them Libs defined it for them.

> (4) National health care will give Americans "basic consumer > protections that will finally hold insurance companies accountable" --

Like "no more recisions", no more denying claims, no more fraud of bait-and-switch?

That's indeed the goal of them Libs! Now here's a multiple choice quiz
- Libs want to

A> increase
B> decrease

the amount of regulations that HMOs have to obey. Chose wisely there!

> (5) Government intervention is the only way to provide coverage for > pre-existing conditions.

As opposed to "The HMOs make up the rules as they go along", yeah!

> (6) There will be no rationing under national health care.

We have rationing now. But we also have the best medical infrastructure in the world, so there should be enough for everyone, if we just fix the cost structure.

> (7) National health care will reduce costs.

The USA currently spends TWICE what other developed countries spend on healthcare, for worse results. We can cover more by lowering costs - just make sure fewer HMO claims adjusters pocket the money in exchange for frivolous recisions!

> (8) National health care won't cover abortions.

If an expectant mother has insurance, and their HMO refuses to cover a procedure, and their fetus dies, they cannot sue their HMO for malpractice.

HMOs routinely put the lives of the unborn at grave risk. Playing the "rights of the unborn" card will not work here.

Under some plans. But Medicare itself will be reformed too, to undo decades of damage from ... certain politicians.

They can go back to Mexico, which already has UNIVERSAL HEALTH CARE.

Do you haters like hearing that Mexico, the armpit of the universe, has better social services than the USA?

I seriously doubt we are big traders with Cuba, but would be willing to read your references.

The US has/had some scheme to screw up ships that dock in Cuba. If the log indicates you've been to Cuba, the ship would get to spend more time at a US dock, which is essentially like paying a penalty since time is money.

Nobama's crazier than a sprayed roach. That monomaniacal lunatic fringe leaky sack of bile really has no idea what he/she is talking about. Just repeats the professional liars' river of sewage.

It must be weird living in such a warped and bizarre fictional facsimile of the real world.

Sad, really, really sad.

He must not live in the United States. We don't have "national health care" in the US, nor is there any bill reported out of any committee in the congress to create a "national health care" system in the US.

So this dude must be talking about some fantasy country.

Diktator 0baMa0 has set multiple guidelines to protect our land for future generations. Somehow the politicians who are most vocal about protecting our environment often do not want to address how current immigration policies are detrimental to this goal. This new video and a short summary video explain how the United States cannot reach its environmental goals unless it stops its policy of forcing large population growth through mass immigration.

You can do a web search and come up with a couple of articles from his school paper about the arrest, and subsequent dissolution of the case. The reporter did a creditable job of presenting the facts without too much editorializing. There are some very interesting points made by the prosecutor in the case. Most of which contradict his claims made here.

The event took place on a school sanctioned road trip by his debate team. It took place out of town, but it was a Weber State sanctioned trip. So, his violation of trust is clear.

The hard truth is that he violated several of the student/teacher convenants, as well as drug related laws and school policies in this event. Whether it will have a long term impact on his thinking is, pardon the expression, debatable.

The student paper stories have been posted here. I don't believe the police report has. But as Bob has suggested, what good will it do now?

This guy has made a pretty good career pissing in someone else's Wheaties. Not that we all haven't at one time or another, but this one seems to have made a lifestyle of it. He starts off, as he always does, with a few on-topic and relevant posts. Remaining civil, and engaging, but mildly baiting the room until he gets a bite. Then someone pushes his buttons and he's off. Flailing at everyone within striking distance.

If you can go back and check his history over the last decade, or so, you'll find that he's allied with/and befriended nearly everyone in RRS at one time or another, only to turn on them within a two week window and make them an ongoing blood enemy. Never fails.

Along the way, over the last decade, he's engendered sympathy, and enmity, from nearly everyone in the room. I suspect, at times, based on the nature of his content, to use as object lessons in his classrooms.

In the final analysis, as I once said some time ago, kicking him now, while he's down, is unnecessary. He's proven time and again, he's self-kicking.

Let him.

BOVIS LEND LEASE, the construction group, has teamed up with the British architect behind London’s “erotic gherkin” office skyscraper on a $13 billion (£7.4 billion) plan to build 750,000 new homes in Saudi Arabia.

The pair are working with Saudi Construction Group, a new company backed by some of the Kingdom’s richest businessmen, to develop a huge site about three miles outside the capital, Riyadh. The backers plan to float the group — which could be worth about £1 billion — in London or Riyadh by the middle of next year.

The company is the brainchild of Saifee Durbar, a broker to Saudi billionaires investing in Europe, Paul Bloomfield, the veteran property dealmaker, and Sheikh Faisal al-Sharif, chairman of DGI, a company that is researching a $2 billion (£1.1 billion) petrochemicals plant in Saudi Arabia.

The Saudi Construction Group is designed to cash in on the Saudi Government’s plans to provide a home for every Saudi citizen. The Saudi Government believes that there is a need for between three and four million new homes over the next ten to fifteen years.

The oil-rich country currently houses more than 26 million people but is one of the world’s fastest-growing countries.

Foster & Partners, the architect behind Swiss Re’s landmark office building near the Tower of London, dubbed the “erotic gherkin” will create a master-plan for the huge housing settlement. The site totals seven million square metres and will accommodate about 750,000 new homes.

Bovis Lend Lease will be the lead contractor for the project, which will cost between $6 billion and $7 billion and will be worth between $10 billion and $13 billion when complete.

Foster & Partners is keen to create a ground-breaking development that provides new high standards of modern living in Saudi Arabia.

Foster & Partners has created some of the world’s most impressive modern architecture, including the glass dome over Berlin's Reichstag, Hong Kong’s airport and Bilbao’s new Metro. Nigel Hugill, the former managing director of Chelsfield, the property company formed by Elliott Bernerd, was instrumental in getting Bovis Lend Lease involved with the Saudi housing project.

Saif Durbar, who helped to set up the Saudi Construction Group, is a low-profile Middle Eastern businessman who has helped to fund a string of property development projects in Britain and mainland Europe, including Palm Beach, a casino and hotel complex outside Cannes. He lost a $1 billion fortune in 1995 on a bond deal that went wrong.

I keeps an old pocket knife in that plastic five gallon bucket that I have some of my old tools in when I am workin on my old trailer.When my pencil gets too dull or the lead breaks from marking lines on the wood where I need to cut the wood, I use that knife to sharpen my pencil.When I was a kid in school, sometimes I would tote a pocket knife to sharpen my pencil if I didn't feel like gittin up and goin to the pencil sharpener.I used to tote a cigarette lighter too, to school.I used to click it on while it was in my pocket.It's a wonder I didn't set my pants on fire.I used to tote pocket change and jingle it in my pocket.When I go to the stores, if I have any pocket change when I gits back home, I puts that pocket change in a canvas bag hangin on one of the drawer knobs in my kitchen.There is probally eighty dollars or more, at least in that canvas bag right now.I don'ts even wear a wristwatch any more.Toteing is for the Birds! Still using the 70' and 200' wires, transformer matched, They are 9' off the ground using treated 4" x 4" x 12' posts sunk 3' in the ground.

They've been up for about eight years now I think.

Contemplating putting up either some inverted vee's or an Alpha Delta sloper so that I might get somewhat better results out of South America.

Ace, i'm with Dave. not being the expert, or experience you have under your belt here. tried a number of inverted V's. makes a nice limited space antenna. pro-wise, not as good as a long wire. believe me, i tried a bunch of different set-ups. the sloper works great. quiet too. but, i'm sure you already know that. have fun.

Once again, a craven-cowardly little dweeb of a Neocon PROVES his idiocy, for all to see. It's no WONDER that nitwits like him HIDE behind aliases, instead of having the courage of their convictions to post under their REAL names and e-mail addresses, as so many sensible and intelligent egalitarians (i.e., social liberals) do in here without hesitation.

Taking a HATEFUL and/or IGNORANT stance while hiding behind aliases is Grade A COWARDICE. And renders the coward with even LESS credibility (as in: NONE) than he might have had from presenting his bigotry, alone.

Obama hired Chavez's American friend, Mark Lloyd.

The FCC Chief Diversity Officer is seeking to punish conservative radio broadcasters to increase the funding for NPR (Nitwit Public Radio) based on the surprise findings that 91% of talk radio programming is conservative and 9% is progressive (New word for Socialist).

In 2006 while at the liberal Center for American Progress Lloyd wrote a book entitled, Prologue to a Farce: Communications and Democracy in America. In the book he presents the idea the private broadcasters (private business) should pay a licensing fees which equals their total operating costs so that public broadcasting station can spend the same on their operations as the private companies do. By doing so he hopes to improve the Corporation for Public Broadcasting currently at $400 Million for 2009.

Not only does he want to redistribute private profits, he wants to regulate much of the programming on these stations to make sure they focus on "diverse views" (Progressive Views) and government activities. I am all for that when I see on PBS a conservative voice next to Bill Moyers. And when I hear a conservative voice on NRP or just voice on NRP that sounds excited with some passion.

He suggests that large corporate broadcasting networks have driven liberals off of radio. His idea is that having diversity ownership will reflect diversity in programming. That is not true. Liberals drove themselves of radio because they have no ideas except doom and gloom and business owners do not want to be a part of that. Plus broadcast, like primetime television lives or dies based on ratings. Get low ratings and you are off the air.

That wouldn't surprise me. The noise he created in RRS at one time cost him with his employers, denials to the contrary notwithstanding. And though he's engaged the wrath of many, over the years, this go 'round, the response was large, and overwhelming. I suspect he figured that absolute silence was in his best interests. Either that, or, after the protracted engagement involving his employers' name and reputation, he may have been told that it's time to unplug from USENet, or find a new place to hang his frayed and threadbare hat.

But, the timing of his exit is suspect. He'd be back at school preparing for the new semester. A temporary exit could be dramatic, and not difficult to achieve.

If he's not been ordered to terminate his USENet activities, he's likely lurking, and may be participating under a different mask. Consider that for a politically active Master debater, today's threads are too juicy to let pass. It wouldn't surprise me if he weren't already here in another guise.

No matter. He's justifiably and easily ignored. Steve likes to toy with him, which is kind of amusing. What bothers me is the number of group members run off by his own generated noise, and the huge reprisals that followed.

Given some time, and the return of sunspots, the character of this group left barren in his wake, may rebound.

Hey, we owe so much money to the Chinese, due to Bush's tax cuts, that just raising a flag is trivial. We should be glad we all don't work for the Duing Jong Comp. or belong to the Red Army. The Chinese own us, we should be grateful for just a modest amount of subservience.

We already have a "green jobs czar", that position is called the "Secretary of Energy"? These livid liberals are just being childish. Remember back in the day when we had to buy rolls of quarters to play "Defender"? Cap and Trade may bring back those good old days, except you will not have to leave the comfort of your home to spend that kind of money just playing games on your computer?

Think the Chinese are going to be happy when people stop building computer gaming systems that suck up 6 or 7 hundred watts an hour? And what will happen to office productivity, how many "credits" will it take to compile video commercials? You think the last election was expensive, how much do you think air time will cost when computer users will have to fork over a quarter every two minutes because of preventable electric costs? You think computer components will continue to improve if development stops?

We all want to be responsible with the environment, we all want to leave a better world for our children, but destroying the economy for the next 30 years is preventable. The number one export for the United States should not be debt. Power plant technology will require the current generation and the new generation of engineers to join hands and create new solutions. These new solutions will require that some young people leave home to temporarily build new infrastructure, and they should be paid well for it?

Creating a doctrine where you want the new generation of engineers to hate the old generation will accomplish what? We don't need to fundamentally change America. We need to fundamentally be Americans. With oceans of water to desalinate, with canals to build, with water treatment plants to build and millions of undeveloped acres, we need every hand, not every abortion.

Cap and trade will kill how many more Africans (yes I said AFRICANS), by denying the benefits of technology through the increased costs of producing and consuming energy, necessary for basic food sanitation and distribution systems?

197. User interface observations (rantings) + Grundig G6 :)

We've all played with techy-toys that were loaded with features, but seemed to require periodic trips to the user manual. And occasionally, run across a product that makes so much sense, that the manual isn't even required. :)

Feature-rich gizmos with poorly-thought-out user interfaces peeve my pets (or is that pet my peeves?) It's as if little or no thought was given to how people use the devices the manufacturer designed.

My cardinal rule for any human-to-machine interface is: Simple and frequently-used operations ought to be simple, even if achieving that makes complex and infrequently-used operations more complicated.

The logic is, "power users" will have no trouble mastering the whole feature-set, but constantly needing to use extra keystrokes and non-intuitive sequences annoy even "power users" and confound casual users who just want to make a phone call or take a photo.

I think one definition of "low touch" is simply: understand and define the basic "feature set", and then make it as simple to use and logical as possible. That effort reduces the learning curve and makes the device easier to use for 90% of the tasks.

Which brings me to the Grunding G6. It's a pretty good overall radio for the price. And, it's not too far from demonstrating these principles. The basic functions are pretty intuitive and easy to use. I didn't touch the manual until it was time to figure out how to use the page memories. And even these features are reasonably logical.

So nice to see a feature-rich product that works well AND performs the basic operations without a lot of folderall, hoo-haw, and kerfluffle. :)

May post a review later if there's interest. My main observation is the selectivity is excellent, and sensitivity is pretty good. I wouldn't hook it to much of an external antenna, however.

It's strictly limited to agricultural exports from the USA to Cuba. In 2007, this amounted to about $500 million making the USA the 5th largest trading partner with Cuba. That being noted, the Helms-Burton Act seeks to punish other countries that do business with Cuba. The bottom line: do business with Cuba but don't expect to do business with the USA. You can easily guess which choice most countries would select.

If you think that the embargo hasn't been effective from inflicting poverty on the population then think again. I was there in 2007 and could see what effect the embargo has had.

DxDufus,

The only 'tard going around is yourself. If you're going to put down something about a country be sure that you actually know something of the situation.

The sanctions work on inflicting poverty on the people but are an absolute and miserable failure on getting rid of the Cuban government.

Well, I certainly haven't seen you Canucks all up in arms and ready to invade!

(That would be a funny sight though!)

But in reality (not that you are aware of reality) it is only the regime of the 'tard boy Castro's who is inflicting anything on the Cuban people.

I don't think "were" loosing but perhaps america is winning and your party want's america to fail. Perhaps there's a 30second TV commercial that is telling you were loosing or the big fat drug addled perverted collage dropout says that. But, like the idiot you are, you believe it "cuase it said so on the big picture TV box!"

your type is incapable of thinking for yourself beyond you fat belly.

Yeah, I remembered after I posted that they were wires. I remember the pics, I'd like to have that setup going north, but the topography won't allow it.

I can go east to west and to south with no problem.
I'm sure you know that I use the AD sloper and like Dave and Drifter said it is a very good antenna, extremely quiet.

You don't even have to get it very high, but because of my lack of a north setup, I put mine up extremely high. Once I did that I noticed the difference on my signals to the north, a bonus add - on for that antenna is that it's a great on the BCB also.

I wasn't sure about getting the longer AD sloper that covers MW but was more interested in the slightly shorter one. I think I might be able to fit the longer one into my scheme, but I'll have to measure.

Plans here would be to mount it 25-29 feet high.

Hopefully it would help me with South America, a continent that I've long neglected, but still with a relative wealth of stations.

Would like to have my lot here much wider as I've used up to 1000' feet to South America on DXpeditions years ago, but I'm limited to 85' N-S and 462' W-E.

The one thing about long lengths of wire is the amount of 'presence' it lends to a signal. Hard to describe, but once one hears it, one doesn't soon forget it!

Well, I remember your yard, pretty big IMO....maybe not in diameter but in length. You definitely have plenty of room. With those two wires and a sloper basically of any kind, you'll definitely have another great option.

I hope you do it, it would be pretty cool to see what fine, but I also have mine facing that way for a purpose. Let us know if you decide to pull the trigger.

American news outlets (well at least those not in Barack Obama's lap) are filled with criticism on the Department of Education plans to bring Obama's agenda into our nation's classrooms. The ploy to reach and teach our children through a presidential speech and through instruction guides (little red books?) appears to be stalled for now as parents -- if nor educational unions -- resist the idea of brain-swaying our children into writing paeans to Obama and his agenda. However, few have wondered how such an idea ever emerged in the first place. We do have some clues and they are unsettling.

I have previously reported that this idea of inculcating revolutionary goals in our children's minds stems from the philosophy of Bill Ayers, Obama's friend, collaborator, and campaign supporter. But Obama's ideological mentors appear to reach farther back to an influential radical Italian communist, Antonio Gramsci.

A cadre of like-minded educators and national service administrators across the country share the same core commitment to transforming themselves from imparters of knowledge to transformers of society. The "change" agenda trains students to think only about what they should do for Obama -- and rarely to contemplate how his powers and ambitions should be limited and restrained.

[Bill] Ayers preached his education-as-"social justice" agenda to his "comrades" at the World Education Forum in Caracas, Venezuela, three years ago:

"This is my fourth visit to Venezuela, each time at the invitation of my comrade and friend Luis Bonilla, a brilliant educator and inspiring fighter for justice. Luis has taught me a great deal about the Bolivarian Revolution and about the profound educational reforms underway here in Venezuela under the leadership of President [Hugo] Chavez. We share the belief that education is the motor-force of revolution, and I've come to appreciate Luis as a major asset in both the Venezuelan and the international struggle -- I look forward to seeing how he and all of you continue to overcome the failings of capitalist education as you seek to create something truly new and deeply humane."

Who was Gramsci? He was a leader of the Communist party of Italy who called upon "intellectuals" to produce hegemony over society through control of education; he viewed schools as an apparatus that radicals can use to radicalize the young and turn them into communists. He had a long-term approach, realizing that it may take years of a "long march through institutions" to train a proper Communist.

Americans versed in Obama Studies may recognize the name of Gramsci. He has inspired not just the tyrant of Caracas but also inspires the man in the Oval Office.

What a load of superheated hot air.

Obama's message will be to stay in school, apply yourself academically, work hard, and graduate.
And to explain the importance of washing hands to limit the spread of H1N1 flu.

There's no evidence in the man's past speeches or behavior to indicate any rational reason for concern that Barack Obama's speech will be any more slanted or political than when Ronald Reagan or George H. W. Bush spoke to school children.

This "indoctrination" nonsense is paranoia and crazy lunatic fringe talk, pure and simple.

Get used it it: America has moved back towards the political center.

Would that it were the "lunatic fringe." Unfortunately, the organized opposition to any initiative by the duly elected president of the United States is the entire Republican Party. The Party leaders openly seek to block the president from succeeding at anything, from healthcare to education. They even brag about it, openly indoctrinating their children to close their ears to anything the national leader has to say. Republicans have announced they are no longer part of the democratic nation, no longer Americans, they are Republicans.

The Republicans can ignore national needs and concentrate on the needs of their financial backers, the big insurance companies, the profanely wealthy international captialists, the oil companies, and the drug dealers. As a result, the Republican Party is the lavishly funded reactionary--even revolutionary--party, hell bent on gaining power through sabotage, the American people be damned.

Hello,

Regarding this pushbutton antenna switch that Grove offers:

http://www.grove-ent.com/SWC01.html
$19.95 SWC01

Was wondering if anyone is using it, or has any opinions on it ?
Sure is cheap enough.

They claim "usable" up to 2.0 GHz.

My application would be HF thru the vhf/uhf scanner frequencies,
BUT Receiving only.

Any thoughts on would be most appreciated.

Thanks,
Bob

It's just a cable A/B box. They work ok, for a while, but I've never had

Barack Obama and his Marxist New Party
http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2008/08/obama-file-22-barack-obama-danny-k.html

They have been called the "Fifty Cent Party," the "red vests" and the "red vanguard." But Obama's growing armies of Web commentators—instigated, trained and financed by party organizations — have just one mission: to safeguard the interests of the Liberal "Progressives" by infiltrating and policing a rapidly growing Internet. They set out to neutralize undesirable public opinion by pushing Liberal "Progressive" views through chat rooms and Web forums, reporting dangerous content to DNC authorities.

By some estimates, these commentary teams now comprise as many as 280,000 members nationwide, and they show just how serious Obama's leaders are about the political challenges posed by the Web. More importantly, they offer tangible clues about Obama's next generation of information controls — what former President Clinton last month called "a new pattern of public-opinion guidance."

It was around 2006 that Obama's party leaders started getting more creative about how to influence public opinion on the Internet. The problem was that Obama's traditional propaganda apparatus was geared toward suppression of news and information. This or that story, Web site or keyword could be blocked or filtered. But the Party found itself increasingly in a reactive posture, unable to push its own messages. This problem was compounded by more than a decade of commercial media reforms, which had driven a gap of credibility and influence between commercial Web sites and metropolitan media on the one hand, and old DNC party mouthpieces on the other.

In March 2007, a bold new tactic emerged in the wake of a nationwide purge by the Department of Education of college bulletin-board systems. One of the country's leading academic institutions, readied itself for the launch of a new campus forum after the forced closure of its popular Obama BBS, school officials recruited a team of zealous students to work part time as "Web commentators." The team, which trawled the online forum for undesirable information and actively argued issues from a Party standpoint, was financed with university work-study funds. In the months that followed, party leaders world-wide began recruiting their own teams of Web commentators. Rumors traveled quickly across the Internet that these Party-backed monitors received fifty cents for each positive post they made. The term Fifty Cent Party was born.

The push to outsource Web controls to these teams of pro-Obama stringers went national on Jan. 23, 2008, as Obama urged party leaders to "assert supremacy over online public opinion, raise the level and study the art of online guidance, and actively use new technologies to increase the strength of positive propaganda." Sen. Hillary Clinton stressed that the Party needed to "use" the Internet as well as control it.

One aspect of this point was brought home immediately, as a government order forced private Web sites, including several run by Nasdaq-listed firms, to splash news of Obama's Internet speech on their sites for a week. Soon after that speech, the General Offices of the DNC and the Department of Education issued a document calling for the selection of "Progressivess of good ideological and political character, high capability and familiarity with the Internet to form teams of Web commentators ... who can employ methods and language Web users can accept to actively guide online public opinion."

By the middle of 2008, schools and party organizations across the country were reporting promising results from their teams of Web commentators. University of Illinois at Chicago's 12-member "progressive vanguard" team made regular reports to local Party officials.

Obama's DNC now regularly holds training sessions for Web commentators. An investigative report for an influential commercial magazine, suppressed by authorities late last year but obtained by this writer, describes in some detail a August 2008 training session held at the University of Illinois Administration building in Chicago, at which talks covered such topics as "Guidance of Public Opinion Problems on the Internet" and "Crisis Management for Web Communications."

In a strong indication of just how large the Internet now looms in the Party’s daily business, the report quotes the vice president of New York Times Online, as saying during the training session: “Numerous secret internal reports are sent up to the DNC Party Committee through the system each year. Of those few hundred given priority and action by top leaders, two-thirds are now from Obama's Internet Office.”

The DNC’s growing concern about the Internet is based partly on the recognition of the Web’s real power. Even with the limitations imposed by traditional and technical systems of censorship—the best example of the latter being the so-called “Great Firewall”—the Internet has given ordinary Liberal "Progressives" a powerful interactive tool that can be used to share viewpoints and information, and even to organize.

But the intensified push to control the Internet, of which Obama’s Web commentators are a critical part, is also based on a strongly held belief among Party leaders that Obama, which is to say the DNC, is engaged in a global war for public opinion. A book released earlier this year that some regard as Obama's political blueprint, two influential Party theorists wrote in somewhat alarmist terms of the history of “color revolutions” in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. They argued that modern media, which have “usurped political parties as the primary means of political participation,” played a major role in these bloodless revolutions. “The influence of the ruling party faces new challenges,” they wrote. “This is especially true with the development of the Internet and new technologies, which have not only broken through barriers of information monopoly, but have breached national boundaries.”

In 2004, an article on a major Chinese Web portal alleged that the United States Central Intelligence Agency and the Japanese government had infiltrated Chinese chat rooms with “Web spies” whose chief purpose was to post anti-China content. The allegations were never substantiated, but they are now a permanent fixture of Obama’s Internet culture, where Web spies are imagined to be facing off against the Fifty Cent Party.

Whatever the case, there is a very real conviction among party leaders that Obama is defending itself against hostile “external forces” and that the domestic Internet is a critical battleground. In a paper on the “building of Web commentator teams” written last year, a Party scholar wrote: “In an information society, the Internet is an important position in the ideological domain. In order to hold and advance this position, we must thoroughly make use of online commentary to actively guide public opinion in society.”

Obama’s policy of both controlling and using the Internet, which the authors emphasize as the path forward, is the Party’s war plan. Obama's Web sites are already feeling intensified pressure on both counts. “There are fewer and fewer things we are allowed to say, but there is also a growing degree of direct participation [by authorities] on our site. There are now a huge number of Fifty Cent

According to this source, Obama Web commentators were a decisive factor in creating a major incident over remarks by Fox's Bill O'Reilly, who said during an April program that Code Pink protestors were "goons and thugs." "Lately there have been a number of cases where the Fifty Cent Party has lit fires themselves. One of the most obvious was over Fox's Bill O'Reilly. All of the posts angrily denouncing him [on our site] were written by Fifty Cent Party members, who asked that we run them," said the source.

"Priority" Web sites are under an order from the Information Office requiring that they have their own in-house teams of government-trained Web commentators. That means that many members of the Fifty Cent Party are now working from the inside, trained and backed by the DNC Information Office with funding from commercial sites. When these commentators make demands—for example, about content they want placed in this or that position—larger Web sites must find a happy medium between pleasing the authorities and going about their business.

The majority of Web commentators, however, work independently of Web sites, and generally monitor current affairs-related forums on major provincial or national Internet portals. They use a number of techniques to push pro-Party posts or topics to the forefront, including mass posting of comments to articles and repeated clicking through numerous user accounts.

"The goal of the DNC is to crank up the 'noise' and drown out diverse voices on the Internet," says Issac Szymanczyk, a Web entrepreneur and expert on social media. "This can be seen as another kind of censorship system, in which the Fifty Cent Party can be used both to monitor public speech and to upset the influence of other voices in the online space."

Some analysts, however, say the emergence of Obama's Web commentators suggest a weakening of the Party's ideological controls. "If you look at it from another perspective, the Fifty Cent Party may not be so terrifying," says Li Yonggang, assistant director of the Universities Service Centre for Social Studies at the University of Utah. "Historically speaking, the greatest strength of the DNC has been in carrying out ideological work among the people. Now, however, the notion of 'doing ideological work' has lost its luster. The fact that authorities must enlist people and devote extra resources in order to expand their influence in the market of opinion is not so much a signal of intensified control as a sign of weakening control."

Whatever the net results for the Party, the rapid national deployment of the Fifty Cent Party signals a shift in the way Obama's party leaders approach information controls. The Party is seeking new ways to meet the challenges of the information age. And this is ultimately about more than just the Internet. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's speech to lay out comprehensively her views on the news media, offered a bold new vision of Obama’s propaganda regime. Mrs. Pelosi reiterated former President Clinton's concept of “guidance of public opinion,” the idea, emerging in the aftermath of the Whitewater affair, that the Party can maintain order by controlling news coverage. But she also talked about ushering in a “new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

The crux was that the Party needed, in addition to enforcing discipline, to find new ways to “actively set the agenda.” Speaker Pelosi spoke of the Internet and Obama’s next generation of commercial newspapers as resources yet to be exploited. “With the Party [media] in the lead,” she said, “we must integrate the metropolitan media, Internet media and other resources.”

Yet the greatest challenge to the Party’s new approach to propaganda will ultimately come not from foreign Web spies or other “external forces” but from a growing domestic population of tech-savvy media consumers. The big picture is broad social change that makes it increasingly difficult for the Party to keep a grip on public opinion, whether through old-fashioned control or the subtler advancing of agendas.

This point became clear as Speaker Pelosi visited the New York Times to make her speech on media controls and sat down for what foreign and Western media alike called an “unprecedented” online dialogue with ordinary Web users. The first question she answered came from a Web user identified as “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country”: “Do you usually browse the Internet?” he asked. “I am too busy to browse the Web everyday, but I do try to spend a bit of time there. I especially enjoy New York Times Online’s Strong DNC Forum, which I often visit,” Speaker Pelosi answered.

On the sidelines, the search engines were leaping into action. Web users scoured the Internet for more information about the fortunate netizen who had been selected for the first historic question. Before long the Web was riddled with posts reporting the results. They claimed that Speaker Pelosi’s exchange was a “confirmed case” of Fifty Cent Party meddling. As it turned out, “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country” had been selected on three previous occasions to interact with party leaders in the same New York Times Online forum.

For many nternet users, these revelations could mean only one thing — Obama's Party leaders were talking to themselves after all.

While checking signals from 1600-1700 UTC again, today, ran across a real strange one.
On 13560 Khz there was a very strong carrier, S9+20db with a mid-range, steady audio modulation. Also a faint 'tick-tick' in the background.Sort of sounded like a recording device. Signal still heard at 1842 UTC. Any ideas ?? Local artifact (doubtful) A new SW station, testing ?? Could not find this frequency in any lists I checked, including EIBI, etc.
Signal may still be on now (1900 UTC) so give a listen and see if you can hear it. Thanks, and good listening from SW4ever...

I see or hear no carrier but I do hear the ticking.
Other than that, it is an extremely quiet freq. as of 1950 UTC. QTH is Cincinnati,Ohio. My signal strength meter is on 0 and if I didn't know better
I would have thought the radio was off.

239. Eduardo - did the NRSC and iBiquity strong-arm Clear Channel into AM-HD?

"Another Editorial Rant about HD Radio"

"AM HD Radio critics have hailed how the AM HD carriers do not fit within the NRSC-2 passband and permissible FCC emission mask. If true, this would be illegal. However, iBiquity was careful to design these carriers to fit within the NRSC-2 mask. They took advantage of a 'legal loophole,' in that the NRSC-2 mask was never designed for continuous energy to be contained within the two outer (lower and upper) sidebands of any given AM radio station... This hissing sound steps onto the station's first and second adjacent neighbors."

http://meduci.com/

"Statement of Jeff Littlejohn Senior VP Engineering Services Clear Channel Communications Regarding AM IBOC Field observations Presented to the National Radio Systems Committee"

"The current AM allocation rules require Co-Channel stations to provide 20:1 protections to each other and first adjacent channel stations to provide 2:1 protection to each other. While this works fine in an all-analog environment, it does not seem to be sufficient in the presence of IBOC. The energy above 10 KHz from the proposed Hybrid IBOC signal significantly exceeds the energy present in the current analog AM signal. For this reason, the amount of energy provided to a first adjacent station is significantly more detrimental than our current allocation rules allow for."

"FMeXtra: Another On-Channel Solution"

"Eventually DRE asked the NRSC to reactivate the DAB subcommittee. Early on, we saw that IBOC was going nowhere as long as there were multiple proponents, and even in the best estimates, it would be many years before there would be any return on investment. So we decided to license our patent portfolio for use in IBOC to USA Digital Radio, which eventually merged with Lucent's IBOC group to form Ibiquity. We are an Ibiquity shareholder... There is no significant difference in spectrum occupancy between the 'extended hybrid' mode of IBOC today and these earlier systems, which were deemed by the NRSC and others to be incompatible with the host analog FM signal."

Turns out you are absolutely wrong (as per usual.)
The text of the speech: http://www.whitehouse.gov/MediaResources/PreparedSchoolRemarks/

In summary it says: "Work hard in school. Don't give up. Just because your circumstances are tough doesn't mean you don't have to try. Wash your hands and stay home from school if you're sick this winter to help control the spread of disease."

Radical, Communist stuff, yeah. LOL

P.S.: Obama's way smarter than you.

So, now that the speech has been released and you were completely wrong to accuse Obama of attempting brainwashing, an apology and admission of error will be forthcoming.

Right?
Or are you not honorable enough?

With all due respect, your source is "therealbarackobama.com"?
LOL.

Surely you're not so stupid as to think an "axe-to-grind" website (website!) is a credible source of information.
More like a site run by a propagandist lying sack.

You are the propagandist, not Obama.

LOL

Actually, yes. Polls show he's much closer to the political center than Bush was.

Probably why he won the election. It's not as if his policies were secret or unknown to the voters.

You need to examine your broken political meter. Hint: Bush -> as far right as we've ever had and ever will have, Clinton, Obama-> annoyingly centrist.

That's how it really is.

Before the Europeans started settling in America, all of the Land area(s) East of the Mississippi River were Forest.Except for where the Indians cleared small areas for their Wig Wams.

Lightning caused many wildfires.That wasen't a bad thing because that ''cleansed'' the Land for new Growth.

The Indians had/have sense enough not to cause any wildfires.

I don't know about the powerline communication, but there is all kind of RF noise in the house and city. I like to take my SW100 on hikes into the local mountains (when they are not burning) and enjoy the much quieter background.

13.56 MHz +/- 7.0 kHz is an Industrial/Scientific/Medical band.
(47 CFR Part 18 in the US).

Part 18 has the neatest line I've found so far in the FCC regulations in paragraph 18.305: "ISM Equipment operating on a frequency specified in (paragraph) 18.301 is allowed unlimited radiated energy in the band specified by the frequency."

And by the way, you seem to have "conveniently" forgotten to cite a URL

* The speech he is to give (with URL cited above) is basically saying

Now that President Obama has given his speech to the school children, it is obvious why the Republicans were so adamantly opposed to it.
President Obama was clearly trying to indoctrinate the students with those liberal values that are hated so much by the Republicans: hard work, perserverance, fair play, etc.

Well Guy I don't know what went wrong with my Kiwa Loop. Last out in Seefontein last March it worked fine. Now at Jongensgat in September it sounds "active" but none of the controls work and it won't pick up any signals. I'm going to Atlanta now to see my son, but when I get back in October I will e-mail Craig and see what can be done. It can't be shipped back to him due to the huge costs of shipping from South Africa.

Well the great catches come in due to the location, by the seaside and the wonderful MW "sea gain" effect. We were all using beverage antennas - Gary was using a tiny shirt pocket ultralight Sony, Vince was using a Drake R8A (my old one that was wiped out by lightning - another pal took it to Drake service in the U.S and they put new motherboards in it).

I was using my new Icom IC-7600 (sold my 7700 and 756Pro3) - it's a superb receiver and it's reception of the MW band in AM mode is just awesome.

- Probably why he won the election. It's not as if his policies were

On Oct 1, 1991, Bush Senior also spoke to students. He made statements such as ""Block out the kids who think it's not cool to be

The controversy over President Obama's speech to the nation's schoolchildren will likely be over shortly after Obama speaks today at Wakefield High School in Arlington, Virginia. But when President George H.W. Bush delivered a similar speech on October 1, 1991, from Alice Deal Junior High School in Washington DC, the controversy was just beginning. Democrats, then the majority party in Congress, not only denounced Bush's speech -- they also ordered the General Accounting Office to investigate its production and later summoned top Bush administration officials to Capitol Hill for an extensive hearing on the issue.

Unlike the Obama speech, in 1991 most of the controversy came after, not before, the president's school appearance. The day after Bush spoke, the Washington Post published a front-page story suggesting the speech was carefully staged for the president's political benefit.
"The White House turned a Northwest Washington junior high classroom into a television studio and its students into props," the Post reported.

With the Post article in hand, Democrats pounced. "The Department of Education should not be producing paid political advertising for the president, it should be helping us to produce smarter students," said Richard Gephardt, then the House Majority Leader. "And the president should be doing more about education than saying, 'Lights, camera, action.'"

Democrats did not stop with words. Rep. William Ford, then chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, ordered the General Accounting Office to investigate the cost and legality of Bush's appearance. On October 17, 1991, Ford summoned then-Education Secretary Lamar Alexander and other top Bush administration officials to testify at a hearing devoted to the speech. "The hearing this morning is to really examine the expenditure of $26,750 of the Department of Education funds to produce and televise an appearance by President Bush at Alice Deal Junior High School in Washington, DC," Ford began. "As the chairman of the committee charged with the authorization and implementation of education programs, I am very much interested in the justification, rationale for giving the White House scarce education funds to produce a media event."

Unfortunately for Ford, the General Accounting Office concluded that the Bush administration had not acted improperly. "The speech itself and the use of the department's funds to support it, including the cost of the production contract, appear to be legal," the GAO wrote in a letter to Chairman Ford. "The speech also does not appear to have violated the restrictions on the use of appropriations for publicity and propaganda."

That didn't stop Democratic allies from taking their own shots at Bush. The National Education Association denounced the speech, saying it "cannot endorse a president who spends $26,000 of taxpayers' money on a staged media event at Alice Deal Junior High School in Washington, D.C. -- while cutting school lunch funds for our neediest youngsters."

Lost in all the denouncing and investigating was the fact that Bush's speech itself, like Obama's today, was entirely unremarkable.

Wow, did Gibraltar move to the equator? All geosynchronus satellites orbit over the equator. What happens is there is a cluster of satellites that orbit in what looks like the same spot to someone on the surface of the earth all broadcasting on different frequencies. This is quite common.

One of them is used to relay the FTA broadcasts to the UK, Scotland and Wales. In order to receive it you point an antenna at the cluster. The antenna needs enough gain to receive a signal that can be decoded.

In order to reduce the size of the antenna needed, and to limit the availability of programing, the satellites use as narrow aka "spot beam" signal.

It just so happens that Gibraltar is close enough to receive the signals with a larger than normal dish. I checked, and here in Jerusalem, although I can "see" the satellites, I can not get enough signal with a 9 meter (30 foot) dish to be useable.

Since Gibraltar is an overseas territory of the UK, but not part of the UK per se, they have very different copyright laws than the UK. It is legal for them to put up a dish, receive the FTA signal and watch it. It is not legal for them to sell the signals that they receive.

However, they can sell you bandwidth from their computers to yours. One company will sell you bandwidth and free of charge (for the signal) fill it with a UK TV signal they receive off of the FTA satellites.

Whether or not it is legal for you to receive the signal on the bandwidth you purchase from them, varies from country to country. Whether or not it is possible to have enough of the information contained in the bandwith you purchased arrive at your computer fast enough and complete enough to watch a TV signal is impossible to predict and may vary from day to day, or even minute to minute.

In plain English, you search the web for them, you try their free trial if they have one, and if not buy a month and try it. If it works, you may be happy, if it does not, then you are out a little bit of money.

It would IMHO behoove you to spend the time and effort to find out if it is legal where you live to do it, and what would happen if you were found out if it is not.

Geoff.

is the place to go. You might want to search Craigslist for a Channel Master dish. You need about a meter in size, though they sell one slightly smaller (90CM) that works fine. I think Channel Master dumped the line after being bought by Andrews, so most of what you find these days are crappy Chinese dishes.

You need to rotate the dish. You also need to switch polarization on the fly, so you need a quad lnbf.

This website plus Lyngsat will help you do a site plan for your installation. These things don't always have to go on the roof. It is a bit more complicated than a TV antenna, so going on the roof to hack is a pain.

You need a sat meter.

Most people using the smaller dishes are not going for the polar mount, but are using the Motek SG2100. This motor is pirated all over China, so who knows if you can get the real thing these days. Probably not from ebay.

Then of course the FTA receiver. I got a Nuesat SP-6000 ($40) for starters, but I'll probably upgrade,

Mr. Leno, broke down by the side of the road, is a somewhat familiar sight in Beautiful Downtown Burbank. Just another local eccentric I suppose.

I don't know for sure, but I think three foot satellite dishes have been outlawed here in Jackson,Mississippi.About nine years ago, with my WebTV box, I could view a taped replay/digitally recorded/whatever, of a news weather and sports tv program from a tv station in Dublin,Ireland.Of course it was a sort of a stop action/break action viewing experience, if you know what I mean? miso, can you actually pick up live Ireland and Scotland (Wales too) tv with your satellite equipment? in good quality? cuhulin

A sound bite on Paul Gallo's radio talk show said, (as they were heading into a station break) Can anyone here speak Spanish? I think we are heading down a slippery slope!

Yeaterday, I fixed up my old two wheels yard cart.Today, I am going to gits started on riggin up two (TWO) locks on the rear doors on my old trailer.That will probally take me a few days to git that done.I has a few ideas.
I am slowwwwww,,,,,,,

About three sumpin months ago, a guy was installing Dish Network satellite tv equipment at one of the houses next door to doggy's couch.I asked him if he knows about Free To Air (FTA) satellite tv, and if I buy the equipment, will he install it for me.He said he knows about FTA and he can't install FTA for me.(Company policy, I suppose, he could get fired if he did) He also said most people in America don't know about FTA.I think he is right.

I reckon as how I will lets my fangers do the walkin in my Jackson phone book and see what I can find.I think those elderly people at the Hooper Sound store on Terry Road might know.

Oh, Boo Hoo, Woe is me,,, Woe is me,,, all I wants to do is watch Live Ireland and Scotland (Wales too) Free To Air Satellite TV.

You are an idiot. They were taken down by the "ELF" wacko environmental group.

Go back to your kiddies groups and talk about marbles, pocket knives and playing mumbly peg. And, take all your dickhead friends with you.

Thanks everyone, for the info on the strange signal.. So many radio towers around here that I wondered if it was an artifact. Will check out other freqs. as well.
Nice response and appreciated muchly...

I've got that "Buzz Aldrin" edition G6 - is that a real Grundig?

Best tuner in the house, for sure!

But my real concern is that I know I can get the time signals on the internet or phone, but aren't they delayed compared to getting them straight off the shortwave?

CONUS, there are no restrictions on dishes 1 meter or less, per FCC and thus federal law. You may be able to use larger dishes, but anything over 1 meter is subject to local restrictions. I wouldn't go bigger than 1.2 meters.

The small dishes used by Dish or Direct won't cut it.

Many of the shows on FTA are available on the net. I haven't seen it happen in the US, but the DoD has bought time on satellites targeted to the EU and put UAV video on them.

I have a suspicion you will like the Saturday Night Knife and Gun Show.

Many Mexican Restaurant's here in Northern California have these 8 Foot Dishes on their Roofs, or in the back for catching the TV Sports from Mexico.

347. Listening to a Liar

The most important thing about what anyone says are not the words themselves but the credibility of the person who says them.

The words of convicted swindler Bernie Madoff were apparently quite convincing to many people who were regarded as knowledgeable and sophisticated. If you go by words, you can be led into anything.

No doubt millions of people will be listening to the words of President Barack Obama Wednesday night when he makes a televised address to a joint session of Congress on his medical care plans. But, if they think that the words he says are what matters, they can be led into something much worse than being swindled out of their money.

One plain fact should outweigh all the words of Barack Obama and all the impressive trappings of the setting in which he says them: He tried to rush Congress into passing a massive government takeover of the nation's medical care before the August recess-- for a program that would not take effect until 2013!

Whatever President Obama is, he is not stupid. If the urgency to pass the medical care legislation was to deal with a problem immediately, then why postpone the date when the legislation goes into effect for years-- more specifically, until the year after the next Presidential election?

If this is such an urgently needed program, why wait for years to put it into effect? And if the public is going to benefit from this, why not let them experience those benefits before the next Presidential election?

If it is not urgent that the legislation goes into effect immediately, then why don't we have time to go through the normal process of holding Congressional hearings on the pros and cons, accompanied by public discussions of its innumerable provisions? What sense does it make to "hurry up and wait" on something that is literally a matter of life and death?

If we do not believe that the President is stupid, then what do we believe? The only reasonable alternative seems to be that he wanted to get this massive government takeover of medical care passed into law before the public understood what was in it.

Moreover, he wanted to get re-elected in 2012 before the public experienced what its actual consequences would be.

Unfortunately, this way of doing things is all too typical of the way this administration has acted on a wide range of issues.

Consider the "stimulus" legislation. Here the administration was successful in rushing a massive spending bill through Congress in just two days-- after which it sat on the President's desk for three days, while he was away on vacation. But, like the medical care legislation, the "stimulus" legislation takes effect slowly.

The Congressional Budget Office estimates that it will be September 2010 before even three-quarters of the money will be spent. Some economists expect that it will not all be spent by the end of 2010.

What was the rush to pass it, then? It was not to get that money out into the economy as fast as possible. It was to get that money-- and the power that goes with it-- into the hands of the government. Power is what politics is all about.

The worst thing that could happen, from the standpoint of those seeking more government power over the economy, would be for the economy to begin recovering on its own while months were being spent debating the need for a "stimulus" bill. As the President's chief of staff, Rahm Emanuel, said, you can't let a crisis "go to waste" when "it's an opportunity to do things you could not do before."

There are lots of people in the Obama administration who want to do things that have not been done before-- and to do them before the public realizes what is happening.

The proliferation of White House "czars" in charge of everything from financial issues to media issues is more of the same circumvention of the public and of the Constitution. Czars don't have to be confirmed by the Senate, the way Cabinet members must be, even though czars may wield more power, so you may never know what these people are like, until it is too late.

What Barack Obama says Wednesday night is not nearly as important as what he has been doing-- and how he has been doing it.

Lyngsat does not sell anything, they are a directory site. If you want an FTA rig, you have to find an FTA satellite dealer in the area and get them to install it.

If you are handy with tools, good at climbing on roofs, and have some math and computer skills you can do it yourself. It's difficult because there is a hard and an easy way to align the dish, and the easy way requires some equipment that costs more than you would be willing to spend on the whole enterprise.

Look at Lyngsat for the package you want to try and receive and then use the site I posted in a previous link to see if you can receive the signals you want. In the end once you determine that you can get what you want from where you are with a dish you are willing to buy and can get the permits you need (if any), you need to look and see if it will work.

Then you have to look up in the direction of the satellite (azimuth) and at the angle it will be at (elevation) to make sure you have a clear view of the sky. If there is a building or trees, etc in the way, you will have to move the dish.

Same here. I listen to WCBS 880 in the morning while having breakfast. At the top of the hour, they announce, "The time is 6:00 a.m." and there is a beep. But it is consistently slow by about 7 seconds.

Obviously, they are on a delay. But when you sound a beep, it ought to be accurate! Maybe not a big deal but this is the flagship station of the CBS network (50,000 watts clear channel).

I thought my watch was going bad as I had just set it to WWV!

Wow! That certainly is an upgrade. Certainly out of my budget, but it no longer seems to be available, at least not through Heartland, Amazon, or other on-line E-tailers.

Another question - one Grundig leaves unanswered in the G6 instructions manual: WHERE can I pick up the antenna that would fit in the mini 1/8" jack on the side? The manual says only that provision is made for such antenna, but nothing about how to go about getting one.

Or can I make one myself?

Thanks,

1010 WINS also has tones - at the top AND bottom of every hour. But from week to week I've noticed that WINS and WCBS change places like Tony & Jimmy in a NASCAR race - LOL! one week WINS beeps 10 sec ahead of CBS, the next week they're about dead heat, the next week, CBS beats wins by 5 sec. Two week later, WINS's is first. WTF?? Can anyone over at those stations set time?

And now that there are pretty much only 2 SW frequencies from where to get official time signals, the situation is not promising.

And I'm in the cafeteria at work at 11:30am - I work an early early shift, but get out at 3pm. :) So as the time approaches 12 on my watch I start hearing other watches beeing as early as 11:54, and as late as 12:05!!! It's almost comical! How difficult is it to get a source to accurately set one's watch?

I Listened on the Radio to 'My President' Obama Speak on Real Health Care Reform for 48 Minutes.

-if- What was in the Pelosi-Ried {Partisan} Congressional Obama-Care© was scrapped and we went with just the Changes in Prez Obama's Speech; a Bill of some 48 Pages in plain English then we would have real beginning at Heath Reform -not- Massive Socialized Medicine.

The Pelosi-Reid {Partisan} Congressional Obama-Care© Health Care is Too Much, Too Fast and Too Too Costly and Imposes
Massive Socialized Medicine; and at 1300 Pages has way too many rat-hole details for a beginning {foundation} Bill.

I then Watched 'My President' on the TV Speak on Real Health Care Reform for 48 Minutes.
-so- Why Not "Cut" the current Congressional Obama-Care© Bill from 1300 Pages down to some 480 Pages in government English then we would have real beginning at Heath Reform
-not- Massive Socialized Medicine run by the Government.
* Un-Lock Medical Insurance from State Boundaries
* Open Up a National Nation-Wide Medical

I can find satellites pretty easily with a compass and an inclinometer.
I have my old Boy Scout compass, and the inclinometer came with an Echostar (Houston Tracker) IRD self-install kit. I use Lyngsat and a Standard receiver to fine aim, once I've gotten in the ballpark with the crude tools. You can usually go to the satellite operator's page and that'll tell you where to look on the compass for your area.

KNX 1070 does the same thing. They use distributed time code; seems like the master clock would have an offset.

In a recent interview, Melbourne-based architect Patrick Jost had the following comments on Pruitt-Igoe:

“First of all” he said, “Pruitt-Igoe never won an award. That’s a misconception. I think most of Pruitt-Igoe’s fame comes from the fact that it was in Koyaanisqatsi, and then the music from that part of the film has been used in other films, such as Snyder’s Watchmen.”

“The architects, Cochran Gardens, did win awards, but certainly not for Pruitt-Igoe” Jost said.

Patrick Jost is known for innovative designs that maximize the inherent properties of materials while taking into consideration how people live and special needs of the community.

Doesn't IBOC delay the analog that amount of time so that the dropouts can be filled by falling back to the regular signal? Are they running IBOC, (or maybe they are running through the processor, but have turned the digital transmitter off).

KIRO in Seattle was simulcasting for a while (before they turned 710 kHz to sports talk) and the FM had that sort of delay.

The US Congress under the Leadership of Pelosi [D-CA] & Reid [D-NV] : S U C K S !

US Congressional Job Approval - RCP Average
MOST [2/3] DISAPPROVE = 62.0 %
Fewer Approve = 28.8 %
Negative Spread = -33.2 %

Go Green Recycle Congress !
Say no, No. NO ! to Harry Reid's Obama-Care©
http://groups.google.com/group/rec.radio.shortwave/msg/40b864940a355429

Reality Check both Nancy Pelosi [D-CA] and Harry Reid [D-NV] are Heading the US Congress and taking the Nation in the Wrong Direction with Obama-Care©

Direction of Country - RCP Average
ON THE WRONG TRACK = 58.4 %

Right Direction = 35.8 %
Negative Spread = -22.6 %
http://www.realclearpolitics.com/epolls/other/direction_of_country-902.html Looks like 6-out-of-10 American Voters 'think' the USA is on the Wrong Track due to the US Congress and it's Democrat Leadership of Nancy Pelosi [D-CA House] and Harry Reid [D-NV Senate]

While most Americans [US Citizens] still have a 'nice thought' for Prez Obama :o)
President Obama Job Approval - RCP Average Approve = 52.1 % {Still 'Like' BHO}
Disapprove = 43.4 %
Positive Spread = +8.7 %

Sure seems to be a wave of this garbage directed at the group since certain individuals have left.
Just coincidence? I think not! Maybe now that they are no longer here, you might want to back-off with the continuing derogatory remarks. The schoolyard fights over, one party has moved on.

try running "compete", quantcast, Gogle Trends, or Alexa for hdradiouniversity com and hdradioalliance.com:

http://siteanalytics.compete.com/hdradioalliance.com+hdradiouniversity.com/

There isn't even enough trafffic to hdradiouniversity.com to register.
This is a move to save money, and to hide the poor statistics to hdradiouniversity.com, as they run Google Analytics and generate reports. Another deception on the part of iBiquity and the HD Radio Alliance.

Also, you have no idea what was on hdradiouniversity, as one had to resigter to take the courses. Guaranteed, these two sites had different functions, as I took the retailer course a while back, Fact is, no one is interested in learning about HD Radio, incluing retailers and non-HD broadcasters.

387. 9-11 Revisited

The History Channel is the place to be on this somber day. All day is going to be great shows.

The commercial for the one at 8pm EST is called "102 Minutes That Changed America", it gave me goosebumps, unbelievable.

I remember that morning like it was yesterday and how this group came alive, there was no bickering in here that day....that's for sure.

Every 9-11 I google the threads from that day and the following week to keep it fresh in my mind.

Be prepared for the next one is my motto.

A couple dozen crazies bring empire to its knees with boxcutters and maxxed-out credit cards. Fucking embarrassment. Bush should be punished for getting caught napping.

Well Dave, lets not go that far, though I understand what you're saying.

I feel it goes/went much deeper than freeking Bush.
I wonder if something happens during Obama's admin. if the reactions will still be to blame Bush.

Sooner or later the blame game on Bush has to stop.

It will be interesting because make no mistake about it, the next disaster is going to make 9-11 look like a 4th of July Fireworks Show.

The question is will those people be prepared and not loose their heads so too speak and get out safely.

Many deaths on 9-11 could have been avoided after the first crash, people were coming down the elevators and were told by freeking security that "this building is secure, go back to your work stations".... lol...I would have told him "lets don't and say we did."

I'd have been out there.<shaking my head>

He was too busy telling the Arabs he wasn't interested in taking Bin Laden when they offered to serve him up.

He had lies to tell, taxes to raise, military budgets to cut, guidance systems to sell to the Chinese, Israeli concessions to orchestrate, Palestinian extremists to empower, bombings to ignore, and women to rape.

You know, the man had important shit to do.

EXACTLY Steve. This all started way before Bush Jr. ever sniffed the White House, but you will never get people to understand that because it isn't human nature...it's easier just to blame Bush and I'm definitely not saying I am pimping Jr. either because he had his faults but 9-11 IMO wasn't his fault.

I know that day and the week after I stayed with my

Why were these guys allowed to fly?

"Mohamed Atta and Abdulaziz Alomari check in at the US Airways counter at Portland International Jetport Airport. [Portland Press Herald, 10/5/2001; Federal Bureau of Investigation, 10/14/2001] They are wearing ties and jackets. Atta checks in two bags, Alomari none. Atta is randomly selected for additional security scrutiny by the FAAï¿½s Computer Assisted Passenger Prescreening System (CAPPS) (see (6:20 a.m.-7:48 a.m.) September 11, 2001). However, the only consequence is that his checked bags will be held off the plane until it is confirmed that he has boarded. [9/11 Commission, 7/24/2004, pp. 1; 9/11 Commission, 8/26/2004, pp. 2 pdf file; CNN, 3/3/2006] Noting that their flight is soon due to leave, the ticket agent who checks them in, Michael Tuohey, says, ï¿½Youï¿½re cutting it close.ï¿½ [Portland Press Herald, 3/6/2005] Tuohey thinks the pair seems unusual. He notices they both have $2,500 first-class, one-way tickets. He later comments, ï¿½You donï¿½t see many of those.ï¿½ Atta looks ï¿½like a walking corpse. He looked so angry.ï¿½ In contrast, Tuohey says, Alomari can barely speak English and has ï¿½a goofy smile, I canï¿½t believe he knew he was going to die that day.ï¿½ Tuohey will later recount, ï¿½I thought they looked like two Arab terrorists but then I berated myself for the stereotype and did nothing.ï¿½

[Philadelphia Daily News, 2/24/2005; Mirror, 9/11/2005; CNN, 3/3/2006] Atta becomes angry when Tuohey informs him he will have to check in again in Boston. He complains that he was assured he would have a ï¿½one-step check-in.ï¿½ [9/11 Commission, 8/26/2004, pp. 2 pdf file; Associated Press, 3/7/2005] Tuohey will be recalled to work later in the day to speak to an FBI agent about his encounter with Atta and Alomari. He is shown video footage of them passing through the airportï¿½s security checkpoint upstairs (see (Between 5:45 a.m. and 5:53 a.m.) September 11, 2001). Although recognizing the two men, he notices that in the video they are no longer wearing the jackets and ties theyï¿½d had on when checking in just minutes before. He assumes they must have taken these off and tucked them into their carry-on baggage. He is also informed that the security camera behind his own desk, which should have captured the two hijackers, has in fact been out of order for some time. One thing I do notice is that so many folks (I call them dumbass Liberal's) like to 'blame Bush' rather than the sand niggers who actually perpetrated the deed.

The standard Liberal is ever at the ready to suck the dick of anyone who hates the USA.

We'd be better prepared if we just rounded up the Liberal's!

One thing I was reminded of today was the courage and heroism of some of those on board the flight that crashed in Pennsylvania.

Dave, I have to be somewhat careful what I say and how I say it in here. Much of what happened, at its very origin started here in Cincinnati and I will leave it at that.

People, for fear of being labeled a racist or trying to start trouble are ignored when ones in the know tell their superiors "that something isn't right here."

It is much easier to say " don't worry about it".... or "you're getting a little carried away."

Some of those pilots actually got their first taste of simply flying a plane, not worrying about landing a plane mind you, but flying a plane here in the Nati' and IMO it was either ignored or no one cared.

Dave, I have read everything that can/could possibly be read about the subject, not to be a prick or anything but I can promise you I have read more about that day than you. Just saying.

I DON'T want a watch or clock that sets itself.

What I meant by that question was, although most people can navigate the buttons to set the watch, but they don't have access to an accurate time source. I was alarmed by the spread at work, with hourly beeps starting 6 minutes before the hour and some coming 2, 4, or 5 minutes after the hour. Where DO people get their time?

YEAH BABY!! I hear'ya about DST - save THIS!!
The only thing it does is make sunrises so freakin' late esp in March, Oct and Nov.

I get mine from NIST too, Bob, but then, we are not "average people". ;)

I'd venture to guess that only 1 out of 10 homes has at least a portable SW radio - like my G6 or one of the current Sangeans or Sonys.
1 out of 100 probably has a good table model with external antenna run up the roof.

Of the preceding two groups, only a fraction of those folks even know what frequecies NIST transmits on.

1 out of 1000 is an Echo Charlie like yourself.

All the rest probably get the time off the news or when an announcer (like Imus) says the time on AM or FM radio. If not that, then the digital readout outside of many bank branches - none of which I've seen closer to NIST time than 1 minute off.

Nobody at work can stand me because to them my watch is either "too fast" or "too slow". LOLOL!

I acknowledge that I am no scholar nor expert on the matter, but these people ignored the experts and did nothing.

"Between August 6 and September 11, 2001: No High-Level Meetings to Discuss ï¿½Bin Laden Determined to Strike in USï¿½ Memo
Edit event

The Bush administration holds no high-level meetings prior to 9/11 to discuss the ï¿½Bin Laden Determined to Strike in USï¿½ Presidential Daily Briefing (PDB) given to President Bush on August 6, 2001 (see August 6, 2001). Counterterrorism ï¿½tsarï¿½ Richard Clarke will later suggest that 9/11 might have been stopped ï¿½if [National Security Adviser] Rice and the president had acted personally, gotten involved, shaken the trees, gotten the Cabinet members involved when they had ample warning in June and July and August that something was about to happen.ï¿½ [Rice] said that the president received 40 warnings face to face from the director of central intelligence that a major al-Qaeda attack was going to take place and she admitted that the president did not have a meeting on the subject, did not convene the Cabinet. She admitted that she didnï¿½t convene the Cabinet. And as some of the [9/11 Commissioners] pointed out, this was in marked contrast to the way the government operated in December of 1999, when it had similar information and it successfully thwarted attacks.ï¿½ [ABC News, 4/8/2004] Former CIA official Larry Johnson will similarly comment, ï¿½At a minimum, the details in the 6 August PDB should have motivated Rice to convene a principalsï¿½ meeting. Such a meeting would have ensured that all members of the presidentiï¿½s national security team were aware of the information that had been shared with the president. George Bush should have directed the different department heads to report back within one week on any information relevant to the al-Qaeda threat. Had he done this there is a high probability that the FBI field agents concerns about Arabs taking flight training would have rung some bells. There is also a high probability that the operations folks at CIA would have shared the information they had in hand about the presence of al-Qaeda operators in the United States.ï¿½ [Tom Paine (.com), 4/12/2004] There will be one cabinet-level principals meeting to discuss terrorism on September 4, 2001, but no evidence has been released suggesting the PDB or the possibility of al-Qaeda attacking the US was discussed (see September 4, 2001).

I've only ever had one, a Magellan 300, and the time on it is always within a half-second vs. WWV. I have a Casio Atomic I wear when I work live shows, but they start a few seconds early for the profanity delay.
So the watch is still off, as far as the job at hand is concerned. I as a rule do not wear a watch. I have lots of clocks.

I listen to the BBC World Service via web stream at vpr.net. They are about 2 seconds late, which isn't bad for an internet stream. Clear Channel's KTLK web stream is dead-on. They have a cool ID.

430. Saifee Durbar and Bovis Lend Lease: Using Saudi Arabia as a Housing Laboratory

BOVIS LEND LEASE, the construction group, has teamed up with the British architect behind London’s “erotic gherkin” office skyscraper on a $13 billion (£7.4 billion) plan to build 750,000 new homes in Saudi Arabia.

The pair are working with Saudi Construction Group, a new company backed by some of the Kingdom’s richest businessmen, to develop a huge site about three miles outside the capital, Riyadh. The backers plan to float the group — which could be worth about £1 billion — in London or Riyadh by the middle of next year.

The company is the brainchild of Saifee Durbar, a broker to Saudi billionaires investing in Europe, Paul Bloomfield, the veteran property dealmaker, and Sheikh Faisal al-Sharif, chairman of DGI, a company that is researching a $2 billion (£1.1 billion) petrochemicals plant in Saudi Arabia.

The Saudi Construction Group is designed to cash in on the Saudi Government’s plans to provide a home for every Saudi citizen. The Saudi Government believes that there is a need for between three and four million new homes over the next ten to fifteen years.

The oil-rich country currently houses more than 26 million people but is one of the world’s fastest-growing countries.

Foster & Partners, the architect behind Swiss Re’s landmark office building near the Tower of London, dubbed the “erotic gherkin” will create a master-plan for the huge housing settlement. The site totals seven million square metres and will accommodate about 750,000 new homes.

Bovis Lend Lease will be the lead contractor for the project, which will cost between $6 billion and $7 billion and will be worth between $10 billion and $13 billion when complete.

Foster & Partners is keen to create a ground-breaking development that provides new high standards of modern living in Saudi Arabia.

Foster & Partners has created some of the world’s most impressive modern architecture, including the glass dome over Berlin's Reichstag, Hong Kong’s airport and Bilbao’s new Metro. Nigel Hugill, the former managing director of Chelsfield, the property company formed by Elliott Bernerd, was instrumental in getting Bovis Lend Lease involved with the Saudi housing project.

Saif Durbar, who helped to set up the Saudi Construction Group, is a low-profile Middle Eastern businessman who has helped to fund a string of property development projects in Britain and mainland Europe, including Palm Beach, a casino and hotel complex outside Cannes. He lost a $1 billion fortune in 1995 on a bond deal that went wrong.

http://businessdistress.wordpress.com/2009/08/21/saifee-durbar-case-study-in-recovery/

He is also planning to build a railway linking Cameroon and Sudan. This will enhance African self-sufficiency as it will use minerals and other raw materials from the Central African Republic. The eastern terminus in Sudan will also provide a source of aid for the people in Darfur.

Hey Dope,
Yes you, the legal booze swigging drunk, the tobacco addict, the pompous ass who thinks the government didn't screw up by making POT illegal.
I smoke some good dope at bedtime and it helps me to fall asleep and no hangovers in the morning.
A long time ago I tried drinking to cure my insomnia but my doctor took a liver test and told me to quit, which I did.
I have smoked POT since 1968 and I can guarantee my IQ makes yours look like a drop in a spittoon.
Yeah, pot has really ruined me. I am an electronics engineer and it is a conscious choice to not go to work stoned. I would expect to be fired just as if I had shown up drunk.
Legalize POT, sell it under the same rules as booze and make the penalties the same.
Next, sit back and collect tax dollars while the drug gangs go out of business. If you catch someone making meth in his kitchen sink, execute the bastard. Pretty simple to me.

Anyone interested in a factual telling of what was done to keep us safe in the 90s to 9/11 can read Chapter 6 of the 9/11 Comission Report. (About 50 pages)

http://www.9-11commission.gov/report/911Report.pdf

Clinton tried lots of things. For many reasons, most out of his control, they didn't work. he did keep us safe dueing the attacks of the millinium new year but we don't hear about them becuase they were foiled. Was he perfect? Far from it.

The Bush Administration just pushed reorganization memos until the first scheduled terrorism meeting; Sept 4, 2001 Literally. They ignored the 50+ threat warnings that the FBI knew of in their branch offices as of the Summer of 2001 but the FBI had no national analysis capability and the Bush Administration ever asked them to do it.

The Bush Administration never asked the various intelligence agencies to combine efforts against a very real threat. Clinton had "all hands" meetings all through the fall of 1999 that effectively foiled some Y2K attacks. The country was on high alert on New Years Eve. Bush never putt the nation on high alert in the late summer of 2001 despite the abundance of information about an immanent attack.

The way to be prepared is to know the enemy and not live some delusional myth that the US Media has created. What does Al Quaida want? We'll not be told, because it would be inconvenient.

A personal question to all the group.

1. Did the TV coverage you watched show the people jumping from the top of the towers?

Disney News (ABC) didn't show that, I gather that Fox did. (I first saw pictures in a copy of the New York Times that the neighbors had bought the following morning). My hypothesis is that seeing that in real-time had great effect on people's attitudes. The emotional power of video...

I don't care if people want to shoot meth 'til their teeth rot away.
But there should be a provision in the new health care deal that such behavior be cause for some kind of special dispensation.

I did mean to execute on sight the dealer cooking shit at home.
These bastards have been known to throw in anything that makes it seem

More RDS/tagging is probably due to the fact that the new iPod Nano includes analog FM chipsets, not HD Radio.

Huh? Oh, those. (My spam filter caught them so I had to dig for them).

Don't think of them as porno, think of them as links to a malware virus infection site targeting horny stupid fools whose computers

Either way, it's a bit creepy.

I hope you make a nice knife to chop up your ganja :-)

People can smoke rope if they want to, there are health concerns with it's consumption, as there are with any narcotic or stimulant. This is one of the lesser classifications of drugs, and it's not illegal in a few countries.

Smoking weed... well it's unknown territory for me, as I have no idea what it would do to me. Chemical stimulants and narcotics work differently for me.

For example if I took speed it would slow me down, same for my daughter and son. So I can't risk an unknown. It could do the reverse, or it something else... it's too risky for me.

We recently had a packet of prescription dexamphetamine in out medical cabinet. We had to go through a few governmental hoops to be allowed to posses the substance.

We were tossing up whether to use if for our daughters daily medical routine. We decided against it and settled on a more appropriate anti-psychotic. Currently my son and I are not on any medication, as we don't have as much need as my daughter.

Regards Charles

- I don't care if people want to shoot meth 'til their teeth rot away.

- But there should be a provision in the new
- health care deal that such behavior be cause
- for some kind of special dispensation.

Dave - ? special dispensation ?

MAUI WOW ! - There are about 700 [Medical] Marijuana 'Dispensaries' now operating in the State of Cali-Euphoria©

So Dave are you advocating FREE [USDA] Meth for Meth Users Too ? along with Cocaine ? Heron ?
Dave - Treating Drug User-Abusers [Addicts]
With the Drug that They Use and Abuse
-that's-sort-of-like- Long Term Assisted Suicide !
? Who Knows It might be Cost Effective 'treatment'*.
* In the context of what is 'good' for Society;
but ultimately very bad for the Patient.
Hey Obama-Care© could put the local Drug Dealers and Gangs Out-of-Business; and the Drug Cartels could Sell Directly to the US Federal Government; which would Lower the Cost of Drugs. The US Federal Government could pass the Cost Savings along to the Drug Users with a Small Tax to help pay for 'distribution' : THIS COULD END THE WAR ON DRUGS, and Allow the USA to Declare VICTORY IN THE WAR ON DRUGS !

! Win the War on Drugs with Obama-Care© !
-or- Would you make Drug Use and Abuse a Pre-Existing Condition that Banned Medical Services and Treatment for Drug Addicts?
Since they are already on the path to Assisted Suicide and not Working and Taxpaying {Contributing} Members of Society who are worthy of Society spending money on them to make and keep them well over and over again until they finally Die from Drugs.

We knew what Obama gatherings would be like when we saw new black panther guards at polling places in Pennsylvania. And our thoughts are confirmed when all charges are dropped against the perpetrators.

50% of whites voted for Obama. 95% of blacks voted for Obama. Who are

First, This has nothing to do with knives so I cut it out.
Second, the only reason weed is in any way illegal in other countries it is because we bullied them into it.
The reason it is illegal here boils down to one name;
"William Randolph Hearst". He wanted headlines so he manufactured the idea that blacks were smoking the evil weed and raping our good old white women so that it should be made illegal.

Then along comes 'The great war' and he has headlines again.
When the war is over he has prohibition and plenty of headlines to keep his papers selling. After the stock market crash he decided to make headlines again by targeting Mexicans taking away American jobs, and of course we all know that every single Mexican is an addict so let's go after weed again. This time he managed to get "Reefer Madness" made and the 'stamp act' passed. From 1934 to 1945 the war took up most of the headlines again, but the damage had been done. After the war we had more trouble with Morphine addicts than any other drugs.

Any way, the point is, Marijuana is a less harmful drug than Tobacco or Nicotine and the most damage it causes is getting arrested and having to hook up with a gang. That way the 'Justice' system can keep churning out more and more noob criminals that graduate to worse drugs because of their new 'friends'.

I can verify that 110%. I fired up my Hammarlund a few months back and got a loud buzzing at 60 or 120 Hertz and thought I had a bad filter cap. I turned off the ceiling light (2 CFL's from China) and it got better, not great but better. Then I found we had one for a front porch lite and turned it off and could hear the noise diminish from my radio.
I found a few neighbors with them and asked them if they could turn them off for 5 minutes and I had just about 5 minutes of good radio.
It does not matter whether it is a $$0.99 unit from Wal-mart or a $5.00
American named unit from Home Depot, they are the same guts.
Until this gutless country tells China they had better control the noise, and quit putting name brands on junk bulbs it will only get worse.
I have a bicycle headlight that can be shined on the ceiling and provide plenty of light most of the night.

Not all things are what you hear on television.

Three things: Computers, Refrigerators and A/C.

Mind you, our power bill is being broken up into three pieces, as we actually have three different 'drops', one for each apartment (we live in two apartments that have been conjoined) and one for the basement, which also feeds my shop. This month's electric bill is over $700 (they raised the electric rates last month). We have a 'graduated scale' billing system. If we used less than 100KWH in a month (totally impossible), our power would be about 4 cents per KWH. The second 100 KWH is billed at 10 cents/KWH, the third at 15 cents, the fourth at 22 cents, the fifth at 35 cents, and over that at 62 cents per KWH. This is the sort of thing that happens when you live in a country with limited resources that has to buy things like electricity (either directly or by virtue of buying raw materials to make their own.)

Make no mistake about it, if Alex Jones can be screaming on his show

Uh, Breaker One-Nine, this here's the owned N8
You got a copy on me Lelnad? C'mon

Uh, yeah 10-4 N8, fer sure, fer sure
By golly it's clean clear to Fag-Town, C'mon

Uh, yeah, that's a big 10-4 Lelnad,
Yeah, we definitely got us the front door good buddy,
Mercy sakes alive, looks like we got us a convoy

Was the dark of the moon, on the sixth of June with Doug getting it on with hogs Blowing Cabover Pete with a reefer on
And having sex with dogs
We was headin' fer bear on I-One-Oh
'Bout a mile outta Shaky-Town
I sez Lelnad, this here's the N8
An' I'm about to put the hammer down

Cause we gotta little ol' convoy, rockin' through the night
Yeah we gotta little ol' convoy, ain't she a beautiful sight?
Come on an' join our convoy, ain't nothin' gonna git in our way
We're gonna roll this gay ass' convoy, cross the USA
Convoy... Convoy...

Uh, breaker Lelnad, this here's N8
Uh, you wanna back off them hogs
10-4, 'bout five mile or so, 10-roger
Them hogs is gittin' in-tense up here

By the time we got into Tulsa-Town
We had eighty-five trucks in all
Pink ones up on the clover leaf
And I wanted to lick Mopar's balls

Yeah that sounded as good as bugs on a bumper
I even thought of Dave Hall losing his hair
I sez callin' all trucks, this here's N8
I really want to see you bare

Cause we gotta great big convoy, rockin' through the night
Yeah we gotta great big convoy, ain't she a beautiful sight?
Come on an' join our convoy, ain't nothin' gonna git in our way
We're gonna roll this gay ass convoy, cross the USA
Convoy... Convoy...

Uh, you wanna give me a 10-9 on that Lelnad?
Uh, negatory Lelnad, yer still too close
Yeah, them hogs is startin' to seal up our anuses
Mercy sakes, you better back off another ten

Well we rolled up Interstate 44
Like a rocket sled on rails
I though of Twistedhed's radio
and how it almost landed me in jail

By the time we hit that Chi-Town
I was thinking about Tim Nebo's ass
and all the times he keyed on me
while chewing the rag with Brass

Don't forget Jay and Pain and Ice Cold, too
and Jim Hampton way up north Yea them CBers do something to me
make me question my self worth

Well we hid like kids and squealed like girls and pranced around in women's clothes
those bad men in rec.radio.cb
make us realize we're dirty ho's

Hey Landshark, listen
You wanna listen up for my weak radio?
Yeah, I just wanna be heard man
I needs all the help I can git

Well we laid a strip fer a Jersey man whore
Prepared to play with his behind

I was having nightmares about sideband mode
and freaking out over freeband time

I sez Lelnad, this here's the convicted N8
we just ain't a never gonna learn

So I clutched the mic
and cried all through the night
I said I hope rec.radio burns

Cause we gotta gay ass convoy, rockin' through the night
Yeah we gotta gay ass convoy, ain't she a beautiful sight?
Come on an' join our convoy, ain't nothin' gonna git in our way
We're gonna roll this gay ass convoy, cross the USA
Convoy... Convoy...

Uh, 10-4 Lelnad, what's yer 20?
San Francisco?!
Well you oughta know what to do with them dogs out there fer sure
Well mercy sakes alive good butty
We gonna back on outta here
So keep the feds off yer ass

An' the magistrate off yer... tail
We gonna catch ya on the flip-flop
This here's N8 on the side
We gone
Bye, Bye...

Thousands of firemen and EMS workers know that bodies went splat. If they didn't witness it, they scraped them off the concrete afterowrds.

Hundreds of thousands of eyewitnesses saw and heard them hit the gounnd.

Jones never stated a date or method.

In the summer of 2001 it was obvious to anyone reading thenews that some sort of an attack was comming.

It's well described in chapter 6 of the 9/11 Commission Report.

http://www.9-11commission.gov/report/911Report.pdf

Clinton tried lots of things. For many reasons, many out of his control, they didn't work. He did keep us safe during the attacks of the millennium new year but we don't hear about them because they were foiled. Was he perfect? Far from it.

The Bush Administration just pushed reorganization memos until the first scheduled terrorism meeting; Sept 4, 2001 Literally. They ignored the nearly 50 threat warnings that the FBI knew of in their branch offices as of the Summer of 2001 but the FBI had no national analysis capability.

The Bush Administration never asked the various intelligence agencies to combine efforts against a very real threat. Clinton had "all hands" meetings all through the fall of 1999 that effectively foiled some Y2K attacks. The country was on high alert on New Years Eve. Bush never putt the nation on high alert in the late summer of 2001 despite the abundance of information about an immanent attack.

See The Commission report (2004) and updated by Amy Zegert in Spying Blind: The CIA, the FBI, and the Origins of 9/11 (2007)

In the summer of 2001, all by itself, the FBI had plenty of evidence to disrupt the hijackers. It was spread around all the FBI branch offices. FBI Agents tried to get HQ attention but HQ never looked at all of it in one place.

Uh, Breaker One-Nine, this here's the owned N8
You got a copy on me Lelnad? C'mon

Uh, yeah 10-4 N8, fer sure, fer sure
By golly it's clean clear to Fag-Town, C'mon

Uh, yeah, that's a big 10-4 Lelnad,
Yeah, we definitely got us the front door good buddy,
Mercy sakes alive, looks like we got us a convoy

Was the dark of the moon, on the sixth of June
with Doug getting it on with hogs
Blowing Cabover Pete with a reefer on
And having sex with dogs
We was headin' fer bear on I-One-Oh
'Bout a mile outta Shaky-Town
I sez Lelnad, this here's the N8
An' I'm about to put the hammer down

Cause we gotta little ol' convoy, rockin' through the night
Yeah we gotta little ol' convoy, ain't she a beautiful sight?
Come on an' join our convoy, ain't nothin' gonna git in our way
We're gonna roll this gay ass' convoy, cross the USA
Convoy... Convoy...

Uh, breaker Lelnad, this here's N8
Uh, you wanna back off them hogs
10-4, 'bout five mile or so, 10-roger
Them hogs is gittin' in-tense up here

By the time we got into Tulsa-Town
We had eighty-five trucks in all
Pink ones up on the clover leaf
And I wanted to lick Mopar's balls

Yeah that sounded as good as bugs on a bumper
I even thought of Dave Hall losing his hair
I sez callin' all trucks, this here's N8
I really want to see you bare

Cause we gotta great big convoy, rockin' through the night
Yeah we gotta great big convoy, ain't she a beautiful sight?
Come on an' join our convoy, ain't nothin' gonna git in our way
We're gonna roll this gay ass convoy, cross the USA
Convoy... Convoy...

Uh, you wanna give me a 10-9 on that Lelnad?
Uh, negatory Lelnad, yer still too close
Yeah, them hogs is startin' to seal up our anuses
Mercy sakes, you better back off another ten

Well we rolled up Interstate 44
Like a rocket sled on rails
I though of Twistedhed's radio
and how it almost landed me in jail

By the time we hit that Chi-Town
I was thinking about Tim Nebo's ass
and all the times he keyed on me
while chewing the rag with Brass

Don't forget Jay and Pain and Ice Cold, too
and Jim Hampton way up north
Yea them CBers do something to me
make me question my self worth

Well we hid like kids and squealed like girls
and pranced around in women's clothes
those bad men in rec.radio.cb
make us realize we're dirty ho's

Hey Landshark, listen
You wanna listen up for my weak radio?
Yeah, I just wanna be heard man
I needs all the help I can git

Well we laid a strip fer a Jersey man whore
Prepared to play with his behind

I was having nightmares about sideband mode
and freaking out over freeband time

I sez Lelnad, this here's the convicted N8
we just ain't a never gonna learn

So I clutched the mic
and cried all through the night
I said I hope rec.radio burns

Cause we gotta gay ass convoy, rockin' through the night
Yeah we gotta gay ass convoy, ain't she a beautiful sight?
Come on an' join our convoy, ain't nothin' gonna git in our way
We're gonna roll this gay ass convoy, cross the USA
Convoy... Convoy...

Uh, 10-4 Lelnad, what's yer 20?
San Francisco?!
Well you oughta know what to do with them dogs out there fer sure
Well mercy sakes alive good butty
We gonna back on outta here
So keep the feds off yer ass

An' the magistrate off yer... tail
We gonna catch ya on the flip-flop
This here's N8 on the side
We gone
Bye, Bye...

September 2000: Chart with Hijacker Attaï¿½s Photo Presented by Able Danger at SOCOM Headquarters; Meetings with FBI Cancelled
Edit event

Maj. Gen. Geoffrey Lambert.Maj. Gen. Geoffrey Lambert. [Source: Special Forces Command]Members of a US Army intelligence unit tasked with assembling information about al-Qaeda have prepared a chart that includes the names and photographs of four future hijackers, who they have identified as members of an al-Qaeda cell based in Brooklyn, New York. The four hijackers in the cell are Mohamed Atta, Marwan Alshehhi, Khalid Almihdhar, and Nawaf Alhazmi. The members of the intelligence unit, called Able Danger, present their chart at the headquarters of the US militaryï¿½s Special Operations Command (SOCOM) in Tampa, Florida, with the recommendation that the FBI should be called in to take out the al-Qaeda cell. Lawyers working for SOCOM argue that anyone with a green card has to be granted the same legal protections as any US citizen, so the information about the al-Qaeda cell cannot be shared with the FBI. The legal team directs them to put yellow stickers over the photographs of Mohamed Atta and the other cell members, to symbolize that they are off limits. [Norristown Times Herald, 6/19/2005; Government Security News, 8/2005; New York Times, 8/9/2005; St. Petersburg Times, 8/10/2005; New York Times, 8/17/2005; Government Security News, 9/2005] Lt. Col. Anthony Shaffer later says that an unnamed two-star general above him is ï¿½very adamantï¿½ about not looking further at Atta. ï¿½I was directed several times [to ignore Atta], to the point where he had to remind me he was a general and I was notï¿½ [and] I would essentially be fired.ï¿½ [Fox News, 8/19/2005] Military leaders at the meeting take the side of the lawyers and prohibit any sharing of information about the al-Qaeda cell. Shaffer believes that the decision to side with the lawyers is made by Maj. Gen. Geoffrey Lambert (who had previously expressed distress when Able Danger data was destroyed without his prior notification (see May-June 2000)). He also believes that Gen. Peter Schoomaker, head of SOCOM, is not aware of the decision. [Government Security News, 9/2005]

I have 2 Computers, one over/under Refrigerator, 2 window A/C units, and a stand alone freezer that is turned on lowest just to keep the compressor kicking over a few times a day. My bill is only about $60-$80.
We have a graduated scale that starts at about 12 cents per KWH, then goes up at 500 KWH, which is considered the 'baseline' below which people can't even afford to turn on lights or cook.
At 1,000 KWH it goes up again to about 23 cents. We usually manage to keep it at about 700 KWH since the window air units are so much more efficient than a central unit.

Here you go Cuhulin. Better IMO than the Bose (just my opinion) and alot cheaper, I think mine was $99.99 - - I bought one a few months after they came out.

When I read that Henry Kloss was the inventor I had to get it. Definitely not a BCB DX machine, but

It isn't government provided meth like the kind the pilots who killed Pat Tillman were given, under orders, by the military. If anybody sticks a needle in their arm then they deserve the fatal embolism that comes from not paying attention. The people who brew this crap up will put damn near anything in it to make it have some more 'kick'. Execute the guy who runs the lab in his kitchen on the first offense where he is caught red handed by the cops.

is not a manufactured and addictive drug. After over a dozen sleep doctors who could do nothing but try to tell me I had Apnea and I told them to do some doctor reading homework, one of them suggested the medical stuff. It works. Smoke a bowl and dive into bed, then sweet dreams.

Radio on these birds are not as well documented as TV. I guess there is less interest. Given the rules in the non-commercial part of the FM broadcast band, I bet there are many NPR type feeds on satelite. [If I have the rules correctly, commercial FM translators have to receive their station off the airwaves. Non-commercial stations are allowed a satellite feed.

I believe you have your incidents confused. Tillman was killed by his own men while on patrol. The incident with the pilots, IIRC, killed some Canadian troops on patrol because of a bad communication.

WHY DID 9/11 HAPPEN ?
One Man = Senator Frank Church (Idaho-Dem)
It was the Democrats lead by Frank Church that "Handicapped" the US Intelligence Agencies that has resulted in many of our Human Intelligence Failures that are still happening today.
http://groups.google.com/group/rec.radio.shortwave/msg/e7446cd97fd5b524

The Real Roots of 9/11 and the Problems in the US Intelligence Services began in 1975. In 1975, Senator Frank Church (Idaho-Dem) became the Chairman of the Select Committee to Study Governmental Operations with Respect to Intelligence Activities. This committee investigated alleged abuses of power by the Central Intelligence Agency and the Federal Bureau of Intelligence.

For most of my simple 'mono' AM/MW Radio listening the RCA [GE] Superadio III still has a 'nice' clear full sound.
http://www.amazon.com/RCA-RP7887-Super-Portable-Radio/dp/B00120WRSU

Cambridge SoundWorks 740 CD/Radio is used for most of the FM "Stereo" Radio listening.
Maybe the Bose will sound better with a CD but imho the Radio section of the Bose 'sucks' and the CSW FM Radio section just sounds better to my ears.

"Hubris-laden charlatans" was the way a recent e-mail from a reader characterized the Obama administration. That phrase seems especially appropriate for the Charlatan-in-Chief, Barack Obama, whose speech to a joint session of Congress was both a masterpiece of rhetoric and a shameless fraud.

To tell us, with a straight face, that he can insure millions more people without adding to the already skyrocketing deficit, is world-class chutzpa and an insult to anyone's intelligence. To do so after an analysis by the Congressional Budget Office has already showed this to be impossible reveals the depths of moral bankruptcy behind the glittering words.

Did we really need CBO experts to tell us that there is no free lunch? Some people probably did and the true believers in the Obama cult may still believe the President, instead of believing either common sense or budget experts.

Even those who can believe that Obama can conjure up the money through eliminating "waste, fraud and abuse" should ask themselves where he is going to conjure up the additional doctors, nurses, and hospitals needed to take care of millions more patients.

If he can't pull off that miracle, then government-run medical care in the United States can be expected to produce what government-run medical care in Canada, Britain, and other countries has produced-- delays of weeks or months to get many treatments, not to mention arbitrary rationing decisions by bureaucrats.

Obama can deny it in words but what matters are deeds-- and no one's words have been more repeatedly the direct opposite of his deeds-- whether talking about how his election campaign would be financed, how he would not rush legislation through Congress, or how his administration was not going to go after CIA agents for their past efforts to extract information from captured terrorists.

President Obama has also declared emphatically that he will not interfere in the internal affairs of other nations-- while telling the Israelis where they can and cannot build settlements and telling the Hondurans whom they should and should not choose to be their president.

One of the secrets of being a glib talker is not getting hung up over whether what you are saying is true, and instead giving your full attention to what is required by the audience and the circumstances of the moment, without letting facts get in your way and cramp your style. Obama has mastered that art.

Con men understand that their job is not to use facts to convince skeptics but to use words to help the gullible to believe what they want to believe. No message has been more welcomed by the gullible, in countries around the world, than the promise of something for nothing. That is the core of Barack Obama's medical care plan.

President Obama tells us that he will impose various mandates on insurance companies but will not interfere with our free choice between being insured by these companies or by the government. But if he can drive up the cost of private insurance with mandates and subsidize government insurance with the taxpayers' money, how long do you think it will be before we have the "single payer" system has he has advocated in the past?

Mandates by politicians are what have driven up the cost of insurance already. Politicians love to play Santa Claus and leave it to others to raise prices to cover the inevitable costs.

Politicians have driven privately owned municipal transit systems out of business in many cities, by simply imposing costs and restricting the fare increases needed to cover those costs. The federal government can drive out private insurance the same way that local politicians have driven out private municipal transit and replaced it with government-run transit systems.

Barack Obama's insistence that various dangerous policies are not in the legislation he proposes sounds good but means nothing. Unbridled power is a blank check, no matter what its rationale may be. No law gave the President of the United States the power to fire the head of General Motors, but TARP money did.

When there are "advisory" panels on what treatments to approve and the White House's existing medical advisor has complained of Americans' "over-utilization" of medical care, what does it take to connect the dots?

A few minutes ago on his Super Talk Mississippi radio talk show, www.supertalkms.com Paul Gallo was talking to a guy in Chicago about Planet X.The Chicago guy wrote a book about the Return of Planet X.He said NASA named the Planet, Planet X and Planet X can be seen right now in the Southern Hemisphere with telescopes.

Maybe so, but I think that guy who wrote that book is a Kook.He was predicting all kinds of weird thingys related to the Return of Planet X and also UFOs.

Paul Gallo said, Oh, Come onnnn!,,,,,,

Without denying that there were firewall problems, In the summer of 2001, teh FBI in it's brabch offies had all the information they needed to disrupt the hijacking plot. FBI agents trid to get HQ attention but the FBI culture was strictly about catching bank robbers and kidnappings after the act.

See The Commission report (2004) and updated by Amy Zegert in _Spying Blind: The CIA, the FBI, and the Origins of 9/11_ (2007)

The roots of our problems in the middle-east go back to 1953 when the US overthrew a democratic government in Iran and put in a despot, the Shah.

His fall was broken by the Klein safety belt.

I owns a Klein safety belt, and also a safety rope too, like the kind tree loggers use.I bought them at a pawn shop years and years ago. I jist now looked at my Klein safety belt.It has to large oval shaped metal plates rivited on it.One of the plates says,,, KLEIN TOOLS INC.
U.S.A.
MODEL 5480 2D
SIZE MEDIUM SERIAL 1015901
DATE 3 87
ANSI-A10.14-1975

The other plate says,,, INSPECTION TAG

My Klein safety belt measures one and three quarters inches wide.That is Plenty WIDE enough for the average normal person!

One time, a few years ago, skinny divorced twin sister ( www.cowboysnightmare.com Jeri, she isn't my sister) when they lived next door to me, she used my Klein safety belt to cut off a tree limb in their back yard.I told her, I bet you can't wiggle out of that safety belt without unbuckling it.She wiggled right on out of that Klein safety belt too!

Klein Tools Inc makes GREAT Tools.

- The roots of our problems in the middle-east go back to 1953 when the
- US overthrew a democratic government in Iran and put in a despot, the
- Shah.

The 'roots' of the USA problem come from WWI and WWII when we allowed the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia to continue to exist.

Prez Obama needs to 'Change' Saudi Arabia and begin to Set the Peoples of the Middle East Free.

So pretty much, if one is using the tones from a RELIABLE radio station, they can count on setting their watch approximately 5-10 seconds ahead(of that station) and probably be very close to WWVB or

One of these days I am just going too have to pull the trigger and purchase a SRI or II just to see if it DX's better than my GE P780.

Ah man, that has got to be the killer setup. I don't really listen to music much but every now and then I'll turn that thing up real loud, it's the only radio I've had that I can turn it up all the way and there's no distortion whatsoever.

I should have clarified my statement "if {{an average Joe/Jane}} is

I should be noted that those of us who are SWL's or AMBCB DX'ers (a form of nerd) are much more concerned with the "exact" time, whereas the vast majority of people on Earth find +/- 5 minutes to be quite adequate. Some even far less than that (folks here figure if they show up to work less than half an hour late, they're still considered to be "on time")

The clock we punch in at work gains 1 minute per month! And it replaced one - of the same make & model - that used to gain TWO minutes per month. The same exact make & model, in another department

You know what? It's strange, in a way, but my personal experience is that when clocks went from analog to digital, they stopped keeping good time. The old synchronous motors had more than enough flywheel effect that if the line frequency DID happen to shift for a moment or two, the clock didn't change speed with it. Now that everything is running off of a crystal (32.* KHz?) that is mass produced by the billions and no two are alike, nothing keeps decent time anymore. Were there ever AC operated digital clocks that simply got their sync from the line?

Great links there RHF, if no one else appreciated the links, I did.
I've spent a little over two hours reading them.

I have two of P780's. The one on my table is the one with external antenna terminals on the back, I really enjoy it. One of our forum members did a great job on it.

I plan on going out to the cabin this winter out in Boo-Foo Tennessee, there is absolutely nothing out there RF wise and I'll definitely be bringing the 780 with me. It really shines out there. :-)

Average consumers don't care what time it is that much. The quest for the exact time is what leads some people to shortwave radio in the first place. As Dick Nixon told Raoul Duke "Fuck the doomed."

Tea Party protesters trying to tout the size of their march on Washington last weekend have been passing around a photo of a packed National Mall. But the picture is years old.

Politifact asked Pete Piringer, public affairs officer for the D.C. Fire and Emergency Department, if the rally was big enough to fill that space. Piringer said no -- and moreover, the picture can't be from 2009.

"It was an impressive crowd," he said. But after marching down Pennsylvania Avenue to the Capitol the crowd "only filled the Capitol grounds, maybe up to Third Street," he said.

Yet the photo showed the crowd sprawling far beyond that to the Washington Monument, which is bordered by 15th and and 17th Streets.

There's another big problem with the photograph: it doesn't include the National Museum of the American Indian, a building located at the corner of Fourth St. and Independence Ave. that opened on Sept. 14, 2004. (Looking at the photograph, the building should be in the upper right hand corner of the National Mall, next to the Air and Space Museum.) That means the picture was taken before the museum opened exactly five years ago. So clearly the photo doesn't show the "tea party" crowd from the Sept. 12 protest.

"I've seen bigger crowds at Montreal Expos games, but I still wouldn't fake a photo just to justify your predictions of millions descending on Washington," said one gleeful Democratic media strategist. "This is grade-A stupid and just plays into the argument that these were astroturf protests to begin with. They've always brought the noise, but the question that was supposed to be answered this weekend was, could they bring the numbers? In that respect this was an unmitigated disaster."

The photo had been circulated on blogs and Twitter. A number of conservative blogs have since taken the photo down. Some have corrected their posts. Others say the circulation of the picture was a left-wing conspiracy to discredit the event. However, many of them are still claiming that at least a million people attended the march. Nate Silver estimates about 70,000 protesters showed up.

It isn't the first failed attempt by the protesters to inflate the size of the event. On Saturday, organizer Matt Kibbe announced on stage that ABC News had estimated a crowd of 1 to 1.5 million. ABC News had reported no such thing.

I done gots one padlock on the two rear doors on my old trailer.What it is, I have a 4'' by 4'' post mounted vertically in the middle at the rear of my old trailer and I have a 5/8'' bolt through the post and I drilled a hole in one end of the bolt for the padlock.For a ''hasp'', I have an old round 10'' diameter saw blade for a backing plate on the outside of the doors.It is a saw blade that had a battery powered clock motor.It looks Cool, if I do say so meself.Of course, whenever I wants to get my 1914 Ford Model T car out of my old trailer, I would have to remove that 4'' by 4'' post out of the way, but that isn't a problem for a stepper like me.

If the time clocks where you work, if one is fast and one is slow,,,, do what Curley (The Three Stooges) did.Wear three wristwatches on your arm.Way it works is, one watch is fast, one watch is slow, the third watch doesn't work at all.So, divide the difference between the three watches and you have the correct time.

Dave, your spot on. Okie Joe said in an email, it looked to be, maybe 20 to 25K. less than i see at a Steeler game by a bunch. here in Western PA, the express came last week to Cranberry twp. TV news said maybe 100 people, friend told me 15 at most. Teabagger git together at Bushy Run state park, over the weekend, maybe 10 people. the neo-cons can jump up and down all they want. this is the truth. I did Pat-Guard at a small local cemetery. one Vet, we got almost 500 people. i love doing Patriot Guard, VN vets are people too ya know.

WWV at 10.000000 MHz has been my station since 1957 and even though the NBS has changed it's name to NIST, WWV remains untouched. Propagation delay is on the order of 1000/183,000 miles per second so that leaves about 5 milliseconds of error here in the sates.

That was the point I was trying to get across. The government does not follow it's own rules. While the soldiers get pharmaceutical grade drugs, the people on the street do not. It all seems kind of arbitrary to me.

Steve recommended a pellet gun. Or better, yet, a firearm. I don't recommend firearm discharge in a residential area, except in the gravest extreme. A pellet gun, however is a better and less politically charged choice.

You can get a pellet gun chambered in .177, which is a bit small for the target you have in mind, .22, which will get you where you need to go, and 9mm. The 9mm's require some serious pressure to throw them downrange with any accuracy. You pressurize them from a SCUBA tank, or the equivalent. Bitchin' cool shooting.

A .22 is a more practical choice. Get a decent rifle. With a side lever, as opposed to a break barrel. RWS makes some very nice air rifles in .22. Not cheap, worth every penny. Other makes of note include Walther, and some Crossman PCP models. You're looking for something that will launch with a 1000fps or better muzzle velocity.

There is a new type of firing system that uses a compressed air column as a spring. Two advantages, here. Low maintenance. The spring doesn't ever take a 'set.' And the tension can be adjusted to need. These can throw a .22 pellet at 1200fps and more.

Pellet, for this target, should be heavy. You can find quality pellets at 11 grains or more. And there are now teflon coated hollow point pellets. Teflon coating delivers another 100-200fps at the muzzle...enough for the pellet to go supersonic...and the hollow point can open on impact to nearly 40 calibre.

I've got coyotes here. They generally don't leave the property under their own steam.

In a pistol, a Beeman P1 Magnum is very good for varmint control. .22 or .177. A well placed .177 from a Beeman can drop a raccoon where it stands.

This said, if you're not in a residential area, a Glock shoots to point of aim, holds 17 in the box with one in the hole and fits the hand like you were borne with it.

Excessive Use of Alcohol and Alcoholism could be dealt with in the same way :
Get a DUI at any Age and you would be required

Drinking Alcohol is Legal.

Mite be cheaper to send "DUIs & Alcoholics"

FWIW the BCL News .IT website still has the http://www.bclnews.it/Summer "A-09" Shortwave Schedules that are good to 24 OCT 2009 for many Shortwave Radio Broadcasters.

Hey now, I have the 129X also. ;-P

Very nice radio Steve and rock solid. The Q Multiplier is a real asset also, the add on freq.
reader now lets me know exactly where I'm at.

I reckon that is what mine is, except it doesn't say Superadio anywhere on the radio.I bought the radio brand spankin new back in the 1970s or maybe it was in the 1980s.The Model No.on the back of the radio says, 7-2880B
The On/OFF pushbutton on top of the radio quit working a few years after I bought the radio.I removed the pushbutton switch and I threw it away, cheap piece of Junk! I drilled a hole in the back of the radio and I installed an old toggle switch I already had in one of my junk boxes.It Works for me.
Most of the fake ''chrome'' on the radio is gone because I used to take the radio to work when I worked at a factory in Florence,Mississippi that manufactured batteries for cars and 18 wheeler trucks and golf carts and lawn mowers and those old six volt MG cars.The battery acid vapors in that factory ate the fake ''chrome'' off of my radio.Very often, the HOT battery acid vapors stung me like a Bumble Bee!

Most of the LED clock chips with an alarm used in clock radios, from 20-30 years or so ago, used power line cycles. They had a 50/60Hz configuration input. National Semi MM537x and Sanyo LM8500 series, and probably some others.

Working in that battery factory, we had to wear heavy rubber steel toe boots and whatever material our uniforms were made of, the battery acid didn't eat them up, and we had to wear long vinyl plastic gloves.Some of the roller lines, some of the rollers wouldn't turn/revolve, so we had a little pump up plastic garden sprayer, we had to spray oil on the lines/rollers so we could slide those batteries on to and off of the lines. One time, one of those extra heavy batteries slipped out of my hands and landed on my left foot, it broke my middle toe in two places.

That battery factory was the most fun place I ever worked at before.I always listened to talk shows on my radio.Joyce Creel used to run and unplug my radio.We would cuss each other out.One time she accidently knocked my radio over and bent the antenna.I told her, Don't worry about it.I straightened the antenna out good enough.Her mom worked there too, but they wouldn't aknowledge each other.
That battery factory opened in 1961, it closed down about thirty or thirty five years later.

The pure Sulphuric battery acid we used was delivered to the factory in white tanker 18 wheeler trucks from New Orleans.One time, I asked our Foreman guy if I can have some on that pure battery acid.He gave me a glass jar of it.I still have it too.He said, Be careful, don't let it get on your skin, it has a chemical burn equal to seven hundred and thirty five degrees.I Guarantee you, only one drop of that one hundred percent pure Sulphuric acid, if it gets on your skin, it will make you think you are in another World! They might try, but it's unconstitutional as Hell. The Fairness Doctrine BARELY snuck through in an era of three TV stations.... now that there are literally thousands, it's impossible to make the

Many 'modern' Wall Clocks only have the Hour Hand and the Minute Hand with 'no' Second-Hand so the Clock Display is simply Accurate to the Minute.

Many 'modern' Home and Alarm Clocks only have the Hour Numbers and the Minute Numbers with 'no' Second Numbers and so the Clock Display is simply Accurate to the Minute.

WHY : No Second-Hand ? or Second Numbers ?

Most People during the Day-and-Night want to know the Time-of-Day : Have an Idea 'about' what Time-It-Is -while- Very Few really want or need-to-know "The Exact Time" Down-to-the-Second.

"Seconds" to Most People is Useless Information.

anyone care to 'second' that ~ RHF

For old Lead Acid Battery "Leaks" a little warm water and Baking Soda will usually clean-up things well.

Never really had a new Alkaline Battery "Leak".

- Flashlight batteries are full of alkaline, not acid.
- That's why you use acid to clean up when one leaks.
- Then you flush with water.
- Then a little isopropyl alcohol to flush the ater away.

The common Lead-Acid Battery uses Acid

All flashlight batteries use a caustic paste. The newer ones have the zinc inside and a carbon can.

The worst thing for a lead acid battery is baking soda. If you need to clean, use lots of fresh water and a wire brush. Dress the connections with grease to keep air and water away.

656. Saif Durbar, Bovis Lend Lease, and the Saudi Housing Experiment…

BOVIS LEND LEASE, the construction group, has teamed up with the British architect behind London's "erotic gherkin" office skyscraper on a $13 billion (£7.4 billion) plan to build 750,000 new homes in Saudi Arabia.

The pair are working with Saudi Construction Group, a new company backed by some of the Kingdom's richest businessmen, to develop a huge site about three miles outside the capital, Riyadh. The backers plan to float the group – which could be worth about £1 billion – in London or Riyadh by the middle of next year.

The company is the brainchild of Saifee Durbar, a broker to Saudi billionaires investing in Europe, Paul Bloomfield, the veteran property dealmaker, and Sheikh Faisal al-Sharif, chairman of DGI, a company that is researching a $2 billion (£1.1 billion) petrochemicals plant in Saudi Arabia.

The Saudi Construction Group is designed to cash in on the Saudi Government's plans to provide a home for every Saudi citizen. The Saudi Government believes that there is a need for between three and four million new homes over the next ten to fifteen years.

The oil-rich country currently houses more than 26 million people but is one of the world's fastest-growing countries.

Foster & Partners, the architect behind Swiss Re's landmark office building near the Tower of London, dubbed the "erotic gherkin" will create a master-plan for the huge housing settlement. The site totals seven million square metres and will accommodate about 750,000 new homes.

Bovis Lend Lease will be the lead contractor for the project, which will cost between $6 billion and $7 billion and will be worth between $10 billion and $13 billion when complete.

Foster & Partners is keen to create a ground-breaking development that provides new high standards of modern living in Saudi Arabia.

Foster & Partners has created some of the world's most impressive modern architecture, including the glass dome over Berlin's Reichstag, Hong Kong's airport and Bilbao's new Metro. Nigel Hugill, the former managing director of Chelsfield, the property company formed by Elliott Bernerd, was instrumental in getting Bovis Lend Lease involved with the Saudi housing project.

Saif Durbar, who helped to set up the Saudi Construction Group, is a low-profile Middle Eastern businessman who has helped to fund a string of property development projects in Britain and mainland Europe, including Palm Beach, a casino and hotel complex outside Cannes. He lost a $1 billion fortune in 1995 on a bond deal that went wrong.

http://businessdistress.wordpress.com/2009/08/21/saifee-durbar-case-study-in-recovery/

He is also planning to build a railway linking Cameroon and Sudan. This will enhance African self-sufficiency as it will use minerals and other raw materials from the Central African Republic. The eastern terminus in Sudan will also provide a source of aid for the people in Darfur.

Actually the only difference between VH and VB is the frequencies VB is carried on - down where the whales are listening. :) But it's the same thing - tick tones and minute and hourly beeps.

Yes, at one time, quartz watches used to be the mark of excellence, but, like everything else, when they went to mega-mass production, the quality control went to hell. Now, if you get a good mechanical watch from the days of yore, there's a good chance it's considerably more accurate.

- We're talking radio, a very finite resource.

Dave - American AM & FM Radio Stations are a 'very finite resource' ?

FCC AM & FM Radio Station Data : 30 June 2009
http://www.fcc.gov/mb/audio/totals/bt090630.html#START

AM RADIO STATIONS = 4789 [33%]

FM RADIO STATIONS = 6460 [45%]

FM EDUCATIONAL STATIONS = 3106 [22% Public]

TOTAL AM & FM STATIONS = 14,355
Rush Limbaugh and the other Top Twenty [20]
Talk Show Hosts are on about 500 or so Radio Stations maximum across the USA on any given day and night.
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Talk_radio
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Conservative_talk

NOTE - Even Coast-to-Coast AM {Over-Night} Radio is only on around 800 Radio Stations.
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Coast_to_Coast_AM

The Air America Radio Network FAILED because Left-Wing, Liberals and Radicals already have over 3000 FM "Public" {Educational} Radio Stations that preach only the Liberal Political Mantra as the Religion of the Secular State.
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Air_America_Radio

The Left-Wing, Liberals and Radicals have Total Control of the 3000 FM "Public" {Educational} Radio Stations and thus control 22% of the Radio Stations where Conservative Voices and Ideas are not allowed to be heard. THAT'S CENSORSHIP !

Liberal Talk Radio "Public Affairs} is Programmed on 3000+ FM "Public" {Educational} Radio Stations which is the Biggest One-Sided Political Media Monopoly on Radio. THAT'S LIBERAL FAIRNESS

Real Diversity would have One Hour of each of the Top Twenty [20] Talk Show Hosts on everyone of the FM "Public" {Educational} Radio Stations per Week out of the 168 Broadcast Hours in a Week {~12%}.

Put Real Conservative Voices on All 100% of the FM "Public" {Educational} Radio Stations that are Directly and Indirectly Tax Payer Supported.

Give the 46% of the American People [60 Million Voters] Who Did Not Vote for Prez Obama the same "Equal Access" to the Programming Time of the 3000+ FM "Public" {Educational} Radio Stations : Now That Would Be True Fairness and Real Diversity For All American Citizens Uniformly and Equally to the Public Air Waves.

Diversity Is Diversity Only When It Is Diverse For All : Open-Up the 3000+ FM "Public" {Educational} Radio Stations to Conservative Voices and Ideas :
Not Just One-Sided Liberal Politics, Views and Ideas that are presented as the Only Truth worth Hearing.

There is nothing as ubiquitous as AM/FM radio. The receivers cost nothing, there are no wires and there are no fees. It is a precious part of the commons.

The schedules are significantly different. Plus WWVB has a chic announcer, whereas WWV is a dude.

I'm sorry, I meant WWVH. Very early in Duckburg. WWVB is what my clocks tune into in the middle of the night.

No, it's WWVH that has the woman announcer. WWVB has no announcer.

I do not accept any of your premises.

Air America is still in business; more importantly what they started is now bigger than they are. Randy Rhodes, Rush Limbaugh and Glenn Beck all work for the same company.

Although there are 14,000 radio stations there are only a few hundred that completely cover major markets, where the people are.

I'll bet you about half of your 3,000 NCE stations are religious, and quite right-wing. 501c3 non-profit entities are prohibited from political advocacy, as in risking their tax exemption. You will not find unanswered diatribe from the left on NPR type stations.

I still haven't fixed that other water leak in my 1978 Dodge van yet.I think I will have to remove the front timing chain case cover, it is probally corroded on the edge where it fits against the engine block.I will need to find a good timing chain case cover at a junk yard.Part of the timing chain case cover is also part of the engine water cooling gallery.

Yesterday, I saw on tv that the communist bastards who run the city of Jackson are still going around and hauling off junk vehicles and taking them to the communist impound yard.Every couple of days, I crank up that van and let it run a couple of minutes.I need to get a new safety sticker on that van.Pete Robertson's auto repair shop is about two miles from doggy's couch, that is where I get my safety stickers.

My old buddy is coming over here tomorrow.I will hook up a tow line to my 1983 Dodge van and we will tow my 1978 Dodge van to about one block of the auto repair shop.As soon as I get my new safety sticker on my 1978 Dodge van, we will tow it back to my house.

Good thinking, eh?

Back in the 1950s, I read about an auto battery ''Trick'' in a Popular Science magazine.(I love those old ''Tricks'') The article said once each year to pour the battery acid into a container and then turn the battery upside down and use a garden hose to rinse the crud out of the battery.Then pour the battery acid back into the battery.

Two big spoon fulls of Baking Soda in a cup of warm water is what I use to clean the outside of my two van batteries.Just don't let it get inside of the battery.I buy a new battery every five years.

Yeah,
That is why I still wear a Casio from 1981. It won't break and it keeps time to about 5 seconds a month. 4 battery chances, 4 wrist straps, and it keeps on going. I have even taken it diving (free air, about 25 feet) and fallen off my boat many times (mostly planned).

In 84, I bought a quartz watch at Wal-Mart for $4. It kept perfect time. I set it twice a year, at the change, and that was it.

My house got robbed in '87. They took it. Damn.

Today, I wear an automatic mechanical Seiko. Not quite as accurate, but it never needs batteries, keeps excellent time, and I can read it in the dark without my glasses.

Interesting how things come around.

This morning I was using my old air compresser to pump up a tire.It is an old tankless one cylinder oiless air compresser which I think dates back to the 1950s or 1960s, it weighs a ton.The usual sound of the aircompresser is a loud knocking noise when it was working ok.It was running ok this morning, but then it started making a soft thumping noise.Would that be the capacitor on the side of the motor has gone bad/worn out? If so, I can buy a new capacitor at the Flanagan Electric store, or the Johnstone store.

Many years ago, there was a Glorioso food store in Jackson.

Do you remember a Chevrolet Peligruso Caliente magazine ad wayyyyyy back in 1963? I was at Scott Air Force Base,Illinois (Illinoys) and one of the guys in our Nike Hercules Nuclear Missiles outfit, he started laughing and dancing a jig when he saw that magazine ad.I think he was from South America, somewheres.
I remember it.

Hey, I received a snail mail from Motor Trend magazine this morning.One year subscription to Motor Trend snail mail magazine for only six dollars.Tomorrow I am going to send Motor Trend magazine six dollars.

Don't blame China - blame the American and European (all Western) companies that out-sourced their manufacturing to Mexico(30 years ago) and China(last 10 years) to save money and increase profits so that the few at the top could live more richly.

The middle class isn't gone.. it's just moved from the US to Korea. The standard of living over here has increased exponentially since the mid 70's.

A Chinese seller on eBay stole a copyrighted photo that I took of a Redsun RF-1210 radio. My original was published on Flickr, and the stolen copy (with border added) is also hosted on a Flickr account. I noticed my photo in an eBay auction for this item, and an acquaintance pointed out that the stolen copy had a flickr.com URL.

I am not blaming China but rather the American entity know as cheapskates who would give our county away like they have done.
Carter and Reagan should have found some way to tax and level the field.
The Bushes never had a clue and Obama is so overwhelmed he may not get a

Argentine Congress debates media reform law

BUENOS AIRES (Reuters) - Argentina's lower house debated Wednesday President Cristina Fernandez's broadcast reform bill, which is expected to pass despite criticism from opposition parties that it will increase state control over the media.

If approved by the Chamber of Deputies, which is expected to vote late Wednesday after more than 12 hours of debate, the bill will go to the Senate where it may have a tougher time getting through.

"We are convinced we will have enough votes," Deputy Agustin Rossi, head of the president's Victory Front faction of the Peronist party in the lower house, told reporters.

Fernandez says her reform of decades-old media regulations will bolster democracy by allowing smaller players and nonprofits more access to frequencies and putting restrictions on the number of licenses big media players can have.

But critics say her main motive is to crush the powerful Grupo Clarin conglomerate, and opposition politicians also question elements of the reform such as the way the state will be able to assign frequencies in small cities and towns.

Fernandez and her husband, former President Nestor Kirchner, have been locked in a bitter dispute with Grupo Clarin since its news outlets criticized their handling of a farming crisis last year.

Fernandez smoothed the passage of the law by removing a controversial clause that would have allowed telephone companies to enter the cable television business.

She said eliminating that element of the bill should dispel opposition concerns that telecommunication companies would form new monopolies.

But dissident Peronists, center-right parties and even the center-left Civic Union opposition party were not swayed by the changes to the law and made a failed attempt to delay the vote until December when a new Congress will be seated.

Fernandez's bill comes against a backdrop of leftist leaders in Bolivia, Ecuador and Venezuela strengthening state media outlets and warring with traditional newspapers and broadcasters that have given their administrations deeply negative coverage.

In Venezuela, Socialist President Hugo Chavez has shut down radio stations and denied renewal of broadcast licenses. But Fernandez's reform is not seen as so radical.

"Approval in the senate will be difficult but, at this point, we believe the senate will likely end up approving the bill, perhaps after further concessions from the government," said Daniel Kerner, a Latin America analyst for the Eurasia group.

eBay has some pretty strict policies about this sort of thing.
Make a complaint, they'll usually respond by pulling the photo down

A National Sales Tax that is Levied on both Domestic and Foreign Goods transfers the Tax Burden from Incomes Charged-Off on Only Domestic Goods and Distributes it Equally on All Goods both Foreign and Domestic.

Eliminate the Income Tax on Individuals making up-to $200K and Replace it with a National Sales Tax ~20%.

Flat Income Tax of ~40% on all Individual Incomes over $200K and No Deductions [.]

I caught a seller taking a photograph of a multi-kilobuck telescope right out of a manufacturer's website. It was the person's first sale.
This was way out of my league, but I emailed ebay and they took the

- Exempt food and drugs?

no, No. NO ! Exemptions :
1st - You Earn Your Money {Income}
2nd - You Pay Your Taxes {Payroll Taxes}

3rd - With What's Left : You Buy Your Food Result Today All Your Food, Water and Air to Life is Already TAXED.

Illegal Drugs should be Double Taxes to Pay for the Law Enforcement aspects and the Pre-Burial {Medical} Costs of the Drug Abusers {Addicts}.

WHY a Higher Flat Income Tax for 'those' Earning more than $200K because with a Flat National Sales Tax System beyond the Normal Day-to-Day Living Expenses the Rich Wealth High Income Earners Don't Pay their Fair-Share of the Cost of a Society.

It's a very narrowband phase shift and amplitude keyed carrier.
Modulation is at the 1 bit per second rate. Sounds like a wobbly carrier with some occasional shift in signal strength.

I've tried to be nice to you even though you are

The original Panadapter (in the 1950, I believe) was an add-on device which performed the functions of a spectrum analyser, displaying the band occupancy either side of the receiver centre frequency. The frequency span was rather limited.

From a quick Google, it appears that the term has been adopted for the spectrum display in modern receivers (especially digital).

Everything that comes from you would be fit only for a crap pipe.

Talk's cheap - list the countries you've visited and then list the ones that you went to voluntarily as opposed to the ones you had to visit when you were in the Navy. I'd bet the voluntary list would be shorter than the Navy one.

Maybe you've heard more countries but if I got to stay home most of the day no doubt I could make the same claim.

Lol! I never understood why that show lasted as long as it did. And it seemed to be popular overseas, too.

Keep on enjoying the show, Cuhu!

So being wired to stay awake by chemical means and making shitloads of mistakes including the potential to kill your own troops or those of your allies is acceptable?

You are one fucking idiot. Or you miss the drugs that the military must have given you.

Wrong yet again, DxDufus! I trend Conservative along the political spectrum. But you've never shown enough intelligence to comprehend much beyond your version of right-wing (fascism) and the left-wing.

Half-billion in the area of agriculture, Sparky. The embargo extends to critical things such as medicine and infrastructure and investment. Some of the other things required to keep countries moving ahead.

Would want to invade for what reason, DxDrunkDufus?

Cuba, like the Vietnamese bloodied your noses and then some. Your government made nice with the Vietnamese so why not do the same with Cuba? Cuba poses no threat to the USA.

Which explains why aspects of their medical system are better the USA's.
It ain't Castro causing the problems - you can only milk so much out of the people and the Cuban people don't have much to give these days. The embargo, however, is doing the damage.

I can't wait to see what happens when China has a military base or two in Cuba. But I certain can imagine you shitting your Depends and thinking it might be smarter to have brought into the fold instead of trying to keep it isolated.

Lay off the booze, old man. You need to sobre up and start thinking.

Actually, the majority (about 200) of the countries I've heard and QSL'd (veried, for those in Glendale) were done whilst I was working (sometimes two jobs).

I had an experience once with someone else's car regarding that sap and once it gets into the paint it's a real pain, you'll probably never get it out.

Tried snorting Coke, once, no good effect, heroin once through a $100 drugs were having on my friends and would not go there, so yeah, pothead

That damn tree sap Isn't good for the paint.The elderly guy I bought the van from one year ago (he is the original owner of the van, he bought it brand new in Jackson, he paid over $19,000 for the van.I am the second owner of the van) told me it has been repainted before, but they didn't do a good job.He is right too.

That tree sap will eventually eat the paint right off of the van.I have a metal carport in my drive way, it isn't wide enough and long enough for both my 1978 Dodge van and my 1983 Dodge van.I still need to fix that water leak in my 1978 Dodge van and I only have minimum liability (Progressive insurance company) insurance for my 1983 Dodge van.Maybe I will ask those Communist bastards who run the city of Jackson if I can get a Communist permit and add on to the lenght of my carport.

Good luck.
Huge boobs attract boobies, kind short in the brains department.
I find lesser endowed girls more flexible and fun.

Because, moron alcohol is more damaging, drunk drivers kill more than any other group, and even lighting a cigarette takes attention away from driving.
If you for the campaign of one William Randolph Hearst It wouldn't be illegal, alcohol would.

Do your history if you can type that in.

Wally-World died a sudden death over here. There used to be about 20 stores in Korea (11 of them in the area around Seoul). They all closed simultaneously about 5 years ago, bought out by the local E-Mart chain.

Yeah,
I've done that. Once while stoned and not drunk (no alcohol night) a

All stimulants and depressants are damaging, it's just how much you take that's the issue.

Neither of these are more damaging than the other. They do damage to different parts of the body is all. Both are addictive, although you can overdose if you eat cannabis.

Saying alcohol OR weed is harmless is foolish, we're adults we can hurt ourselves as much as we want to... as long as it's legal to do so. Weed isn't legal.

I have children and I like to set an example for them. I don't take anything that's illegal, and I'm not a criminal, I don't break the law, and am not a repeat offender like those that drive above the speed limit.

If you choose to go outside the law of your country, then you take a risk. There's no point complaining about it until the laws change.

Regards Charles

Amen. I took a whole box of No-Doze 100% caffeine back in 1969 to drive from L.A. to Sacramento, then San Jose, then back to L. A. by which time I was ready to die. And yet it is legal in coffee.

I have never had someone tell me about an LD/50 for cannabis, I don't think you can physically eat that many brownies.

Weed isn't legal simply due to the efforts of one William Randolph Hearst. He did it to sell newspapers as far back as 1914.

The home made Heavvvvvy duty tow hitch won't quite fit the other home made Heavvvvvvy duty other part of the tow hitch I made and bolted onto the front of my old 1978 Dodge van.I made that stuff about eighteen years ago.I needs to git my seven feet eight inches long cheater pipe and my Heavvvvvvy duty Rigid (Rigid, brand nane, Registered by Rigid tools company) pipe wrench and see can I do some tweakin.

I needs to git my home made hitch workin because my old buddy is comin over here tomorrow and tow meself and my van over near the auto repair shop so I can git a new safety sticker on my old van.Then, after I gits the new safety sticker on my van, I will crank it up and high tail it back around the corner and we will hitch up agin and he will tow me back to doggy's house.

All because I haven't gotten around yet to fixin that water leak in my old 1978 Dodge van.I don't have to look for things to do, them things that need doin find me!

Hah,
I have had WWV on at the same time as my cable box and found up to 30

Try Acetone or Methanol (denatured alcohol), both freely available at your local hardware store. If that doesn't work try gasoline, as long as you don't have to sign for it.
Just be careful since they are all very flammable and you could blow yourself sky high. I sure hope you don't smoke.

Well dimwit, the tobacco will kill you faster than the pot, which I again mention only because I smoke it to sleep. I don't get up and have a joint, nor one at lunch, just bedtime and I am out in 5 minutes. My doctor even agrees with me that the pot is far less harmful then the prescriptions she is allowed to hand out.

That's a stretch, and contra the momentary diversion of attention when lighting up is the fact that nicotine enhances attention:
<http://www.sciencedaily.com/releases/2003/01/030114072413.htm>

Mobile phone use is a far more attention-diverting hazard for drivers.

>> All stimulants and depressants are damaging, it's just how much you take

It's somewhat more complicated than that, though dose-dependence of harm is part of the picture.

. . . and in No-Doz ;~)

Actually, most all stimulants used for maintaining wakefulness take their toll on users, though some modern 'atypical' stimulants such as modafinil and related drugs have a minimum of bad cumulative and after-effects.

>> Neither of these are more damaging than the other

Untrue. Chronic usage of alcohol is far more damaging to many more organs than any harm resulting from cannabis

>> They do damage to different parts of the body is all.

Also untrue. There is no part of the body that chronic or acute high-dosage consumption of alcohol does not damage.

This is not so for cannabis, and most of the damage associated with cannabis usage derives from the method of ingestion, i.e., from inhalation of the vapors of burning leaves ('weed') or of compressed 'resins' (hashish)--just as the damage from nicotine consumption also derives from smoking the 'legal weed'

>> Both are addictive, although you can overdose if you eat cannabis.

That's not true (no oral cannabis fatality has ever been documented) and your omission of the fact that it is really not all that difficult to ingest a lethal does of alcohol to die is rather telling of bias.

> I have never had someone tell me about an LD/50 for cannabis, I don't think > you can physically eat that many brownies.

You can not.
Let's get technical here, okay?

The relevant factor is what is called the 'safety ratio,' which is an expression of how many multiples of the dosage needed for intoxication must be administered to cause death.

For alcohol it is 10 (1/10th the amount needed to kill you will get you soused)

For heroin it is 6 (and intravenous usage common by addicts makes for greater likelihood of overdosage of heroin users as of drinkers, particularly as alcohol enters the bloodstream rapidly from the stomach, so except for binge drinkers, adolescent (of any age)
'challenge' drinkers, and suicidal drinkers, acute death from alcohol is a far less frequent outcome than among users of heroin)

For delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol (THC), marihuana's primary psychoactive molecule, the safety ratio is 1000. One thousand.

It is possible to intravenously administer that much purified THC, but getting one's hands on that amount outside one of the few research facilities that even have any in stock would need some very good 'home chemistry' and quite a large amount of cannabis to work with.

Forget about trying to eat sufficient brownies to die from ;~)

But don't believe me. Read this peer-reviewed paper, published a few years ago in "Addiction," (http://www.addictionjournal.org/):

<http://web.cgu.edu/faculty/gabler/toxicity%20Addiction%20offprint.pdf>

>> Saying alcohol OR weed is harmless is foolish, we're adults we can hurt >> ourselves as much as we want to... as long as it's legal to do so. Weed >> isn't legal.

Actually, in many nations, consumption and possession of small amounts of 'weed' has been decriminalized.

In over a dozen States in the 'Land of the Free' marihuana is legal with a prescription:
http://medicalmarijuana.procon.org/viewresource.asp?resourceID=000881

Charles, your IP appears to be in New South Wales.
Marihuana's illegal there, but it's my understanding that less than 30gm of the leaf is not indictable. Am I wrong?

> Weed isn't legal simply due to the efforts of one William Randolph Hearst.
> He did it to sell newspapers as far back as 1914.
> Do some history.

It's not simply because of Hearst, though he certainly was a major contributor to marihuana prohibition in the U.S.

Actually many manufacturers allow licensed sellers to use their photographs and hand outs for selling their items. I don't know why eBay would pull down a advertisement on a complaint from a non interested party that has no legal standing.
The OP had his IP stolen and made a valid complaint to eBay.

Also, is lack of wide/narrow switch on the Sony a problem?

I guess the choice of radios is based on what you like to listen to.
The Kaito is good for broadcasting on SW and the Sony is good for Single sideband. Note that Sony is getting very hard to get parts for if the radio goes bad. The Sony is more expensive than the Kaito. The Sony is built sturdier. Get a chance to see and hadle both radios if you can.

You're about 20 years too late. Shortwave broadcasting is dead.
Perhaps you'd enjoy utility monitoring; for that you'll need a better

Maybe because I am on the other side of the world, I would dispute that.
Shortwave broadcasting is alive and well, but it's no longer the prefered method of reaching distant audiences.

Broadcasters who want to reach a more affluent audience have moved to methods of transmission which are cheaper to transmit, but more expensive to receive.
For example, Internet "broadcasting", satellite sub carriers, etc. They have also moved to video broadcasting which can not be done by shortwave.

As Dave said, 20 years ago things were different. A cheap shortwave radio with a short antenna, such as the built in whip, could receive broadcasts from around the world, 24/7. Due to propigation, you would have to tune to various frequencies, even when it was night where you were and daytime at the source or vice versa.

The "biggies", BBC, VOA, AFRN (US millitary entertainment for distant bases), Deutcshe Welle (Germany), Radio France International, Radio Moscow, Radio Habana Cuba, HJCB (The Voice of the Andes) and so on. There was even at one time a Shortwave broadcaster out of New Orleans, which often just relayed their FM service.

Now most of them have scaled down, or left shortwave entirely.

For example, the BBC no longer "beams" their signal to North America, but you can still receive it. Not as easily as before, which means you may need to be more proactive about choosing when you listen and have a better antenna or receiver. On the other hand, most of the people reading this will have access to their streaming audio on the Internet, or via a local cable TV or DBS service.

Many broadcasters use shortwave radio to reach populations that are too distant and too poor to have broadband Internet, satellite receivers, etc.
Whether or not you would be able receive them at all, or with a cheap receiver is questionable.

Geoff.

Welcome to the hobby. SW listening is a shade of its former self, but there's still plenty to snag. Lots to enjoy.

Radios....about any passable radio you buy will be a decent start. It will not be the last one you buy. But what it will do is get you active, so you can refine your interests, and then select a radio that meets the needs of those interests. You'll also begin experimenting with methods of improving reception: eliminating noise sources, possibly experimenting with external antennae.

Any decent radio can get you into the hobby, and help you learn the craft of radio.

Sony: 7600 is a popular radio. Not without reason. I personally don't recommend Sony because of their service practices. If something goes wrong, you can jump through many hoops, waste many months (in one case I waited two years for a VCR to come back from the Sony Service Center, with some great stories as to why it was taking so damned long) waiting for a piece to be repaired, only to be told after it all, that it was unrepairable, and that they'd be glad to sell you a new product and give you pro rated credit for your old one. Great sounding. In practice you end up spending about 150% more for a working radio than you thought you would.

So, I don't recommend any Sony product on that basis.

But if you're determined to go that way, then go with your eyes open.

Wide/Narrow: This is probably a non-issue. There are a number of ways that manufacturers execute selectable bandwidth. They can actually switch in additional or alternate filters, which would be the better way, or they can simply switch in or out additional capacitance to roll off the upper end of the response curves. GRE built radios for 'The Shack' (...what the F*CK are these people thinking) would simply switch in some extra capacitance to roll off the audio when you selected 'Narrow.' To switch in additional or alternate filters costs money. And requires more stable, and a finer, alignment...adding considerably to the cost of the radio.

And if the filters are selected correctly, especially on the portable, narrower bandwidth is usually unnecessary, unless you're in a crowded band pulling one CW operator out of many.

If the radio you select doesn't have a Wide/Narrow selector, you probably won't miss it.

Features overall... The Sony has synchronous detection. A nice feature. Very erratically executed across manufacturers. Sony usually does it pretty well. Now, there are some radio hobbycraft practitioners, and reviewers as well, who will tell you NEVER buy a radio without a sync detector. Ignore them. These people are dilletantes masquerading as high performance SWL'ers. The truth is that sync is a nice feature. But not a necessity. And a good operator with the radio of his choice can pull a decent listen out of his signal of interest without it. Nice feature. Not a necessity. And most sync detectors have enough quirks that you can do better with ECSS than you can with sync. So look for a radio that can detect single sideband (SSB.)

Tuning resolution should be pretty fine. For program listening, you can get away with nearly a kilohertz. For ham/utilities, you'll need something finer. 100Hz is passable, 50Hz is better. 10Hz is good. But you'll need what's called a 'clarifier.' Many radios have them. Many don't. A clarifier will enable you to zero in on a signal in SSB, or ECSS for the best listening. Without it, you may get a low level beat that can be really irritating.

Build quality should be good. You're going to beat this thing up if you drag it with you where you go. And you'll want to take it out of the city or town where you live for the lower noise figures possible out in the woods. Lower noise means better hearing of low level signals. Some decent DX is possible in the woods, without any modifications or additional antenna.

The Sony offers a pretty decent product for the money in these areas. Audio can be kind of harsh, though. And you will be listening for long stretches.

The Kaito is a basic radio. Offering few of the advanced features but it has more pleasant audio, and about the same sensitivity and build as the Sony.

My personal choice would be the Kaito. Because it's not a Sony. Your mileage may vary.

Recommendation: Go to a brick and mortar store and try each. Side by side, if you can. Then find the best price and order your selection on line.

I strongly recommend against getting a mid-priced portable for your first radio. They have very limited reception capabilities. You want something with SSB and the ability to use a full antenna. Maybe a nice used "tabletop" receiver.

Have you read "Passport to World Band Radio"?

Dear Sir:

I recommend the Sony ICF-SW7600GR over the Kaito KA1103 for two reasons:

1) The Sony is by far the more advanced-design radio. Even though its basic design is now fifteen years old, no other manufacturer has yet been able to duplicate its features and design in a compact portable shortwave receiver.

2) While I agree that Sony "service" and "technical support" is wretched at best, I believe that this "problem" is much exaggerated. I currently own nine (9) Sony shortwave receivers - two ICF-SW35s, two ICF-SW7600Gs, and five ICF-SW7600GRs. The only "problem" I have ever had with any of them is, on one of my 'GRs, the whip antenna support screw loosened and couldn't be totally tightened. The repair? PartStore<dot>com sells replacement antennas as well as just about any part you could possibly need and their prices are as fair as possible (Sony parts are never cheap). As you can easily obtain a service manual for the '7600GR online - and for free! - any competent service company can work on your radio should the occasion arise. (Replacing the antenna, in my case, took less than one minute and the only tool necessary was a small Phillips-head screwdriver.)

I do not believe that you could get parts/service any easier, if at all, with the Kaito radio, as good and as inexpensive as it is. I have found that, in general, Chinese-made products do not have the same longevity as do Japanese-made ones (and the Sony ICF-SW7600GR is indeed still made in Japan).

Some users have reported that the Kaito KA1103 is slightly more sensitive off its whip than is the Sony ICF-SW7600GR. But this is a moot point as I, and I believe most serious shortwave listeners, will use an external shortwave antenna except in the most casual of situations. I myself almost never use the whip, much preferring to use the Sony AN-LP1 Active Antenna with my radio. After all, if you are searching the shortwaves, you want the best possible performance from your receiver and, with an external antenna, the Sony is the equal of any other compact portable shortwave receiver in sensitivity - and often their superior due to its exceptional (for a portable) dynamic range with an external antenna.

And finally, with its advanced circuitry such as its synchronous detection circuit, the Sony can often "bring in" signals which often would be unlistenable on other receivers - and this can apply to MW broadcasts as well (if not transmitting with IBOC). Two bandwidths are nice (and I do wish the Sony had them) but they pale in removing interference from one sideband in comparison with a good sync circuit. (If you don't like sync on a particular station, you can always turn it off.) The Sony's ECSS performance (using SSB to listen to a station) and, of course, its SSB performance is second-to-none in its class.

The above arguments represent my opinion only; I know that others may disagree. But I have owned my Sony's for many years now and I use all of them heavily. (My oldest 'G is from 1998 and my oldest 'GR is from 2001; my newest 'GRs are from 2005.) I must state that I have never owned a Kaito KA1103 but, in trying out the Grundig G5 for about 20 minutes a couple of years ago at a local Radio Shack, a radio based on the Kaito's circuitry, I was unimpressed both with the Grundig's build quality and its performance (its sound quality was much better than the Sony's, of course, but that is easily corrected, should one so desire, by using external amplified [computer] speakers).

I hope the above gives you some food for thought.

Best,

Joe

Hi "Jim." It is astounding to me that many people

Kind of strange in my opinion. Just saying. ;-)

Buy the Sony! It is superior in every way. It has the famous Sony Sync Detector.
If you find shortwave boring and a waste of time at least you will be able to resell the Sony.
The Kaito has Zero, as in 0baMa0- "0" resale value.

Barack Hussein Obama0 just dipped his toe into the ocean of government subsidized news and promptly suggested that the water is fine, adding that he is open to the possibility of jumping right in. The Hill reports B.O.'s seemingly innocuous response to a question regarding Congressional bills providing tax breaks for struggling news organizations:

"I haven't seen detailed proposals yet, but I'll be happy to look at them."

Keep in mind that when the student of Saul Alinsky looked at the banking and automobile industries, he decided to have the feds take control over them. Is a News Czar next or a proposal for a cabinet level Department of News?

How many other Stair-oids were listening to the Overcomer the Sunday night when they broadcast the big shouting fest of Bro. and Sr. Stair? Sounded like Jerry Springer instead of the usual end of the world crap. It seems that at least 75 females have fallen for the "God wants you to have sex with me" routine in the last two years. Plus skimming the money, hiding it under his bed. All the usual crooked preacher stuff.

I can't help wondering why the media haven't been on him like they were on Robert Tilton or Jimmy Swaggart. He's at least as colorful a scandal as they were. Maybe too many crooked preachers out there to keep up with!

I'm going to experiment here with an Eavesdropper dipole that I have stored in the basement. I've never been totally impressed with this antenna but think I'll put it up as a sloper. Mounting height will be 25' sloping down to 9', with a direction of about 150 degrees to South America.

We'll see how it plays.

This is quite a leap from giving tax breaks to an ailing industry to tide them over until they can make it work on-line.

London-based businessman Saifee Durbar has a novel approach to aiding the people of Darfur and making Africa self sufficient.

Durbar plans to span Africa by linking Sudan in the east with Cameroon in the west with a railroad that goes through the Central African Republic.

Minerals and other raw materials found in the Central African Republic will be used to construct the railroad.

Saif Durbar sees this project as a completion of the vision for African ascendancy that started with the Suez Canal.

Low end Eavesdropper performance isn't exciting. And if your receiver rolls off below 1Mhz, MW reception with an Eavesdropper can be pretty noisy.

That said, over 1Mhz it can be quite nice. Lower local noise, fairly even performance across each SW band. It's not bad.

And it's versatile. I used mine as a dipole and an inverted V. No dissappointments up to 10 meters.

Hi JimK,

both radios would make a good choice for shortwave listening. Like others have said, the Sony 7600 is better on sideband and it's synch detector for weaker signals.

However, what makes me personally like the 1103 and it's cousin the Grundig G5 is the tuning knob. I like being able to spin the wheel to tune stations, not press up/down keys. The 7600 has no tuning knob.

The 7600 will resale better. The thing is about the 7600, you are probably buying a radio that was made years ago and been sitting on the shelf.

The very best thing would be to physically look at both radios, but in this day and age of few places outside The Shack selling SW radios, that probably isn't possible.

The Eton E1 has all sorts of quality issues, is no longer in production, and over $400 new. But as with the 7600, if you decide to resell it, you will be able to get some of your money back.

Helsinki has a maritime climate, she is on the northern shore of the Gulf of Finland -- which is a part of the Baltic Sea.

The winters are zero degrees centigrade, this summer was at its highest some 28 degrees centigrade.

The weather is often somewhat humid because of the sea which lies very close by. You can start a sailing trip from Helsinki to anywhere in the world.... some affluent individuals like to sail from Helsinki to the Mediterranean Sea, along the Atlantic Ocean. That is indeed fun!!

You mean that John doesn't have that easy pick? I, on the other hand, can't hear WSB Atlanta because a local ESPN clone is on 760 and only 10 miles away. The closest I came was using my HQ-145XC with all the crystal filters humming! WSB came in OK for awhile. South Florida is a wasteland for hearing good DX, having locals running around the clock, or Cubans, on every major frequency. I love WCBS 880, and can pick it up for a little bit, until the Cuban on 880 swamps it, had to take up listening to it on the net. Same with WABC, 770, WHO, 840(our local WFTL 850 keeps it from coming in). I have better luck trying to pick up European stations.

Hello John,
You are just a state away now! Still here in Hobe Sound, FL listening for that elusive BCB DX! Hope that you are staying dry with all of the flooding in GA. They have had a drought most of the year, now a flood!
Enjoy your vacation and hope that you are picking up a lot of good DX.

I've never heard of such a thing as you desire.
The only two things I've heard of that will do what you want is a bigger dog, or a scoped rifle.

If this was your home property you could buy an electric FENCE,,,,, but really, the "electric" part isn't necessary. A plain fence is cheaper, and maybe you'll have money left over for an electric fire hydrant.

If you want something to use while walking, you can carry a slingshot with some small steel BB (quarter-inch/6mm) ammo. Cheap, quiet and easy to use. Dunno how well you'd be hitting dog-sized stuff 50 yards out though.

Hi Guy and Bob,
Yes this African bush baby is in mighty USA and awed by the vast stores - Fry's electronics just blew my mind. Amazon tempted me with a new Grundig G8 Traveller II for fifty bucks and am havinf fun chasing ten states on this little ultralight. Plenty of exiting MW, but US reception of shortwave is very poor compared with Africa.

Actually it is my son, grandson and daughter-in-law that we are visiting and they are looking after us royally. On Monday the storm seemed to be clearing so daughter in law took us out to shop - we hardly got on the road and it started bucketing down and the creeks started flooding. Thankfully she got us home again safely but the floods were frightening.

Enjoying Neil Goortz on WSB 750 AM = a great show. He has just been inducted into the Radio Hall of Fame to join such greats as I remember like Edgar G Murrow.

Maybe I will win the Lotto one day and be able to visit all my US mates.....???

Have fun and good DX - JP

How is it over there in Israel Geoff? I've been saving at least twenty dollars (more often than not thirty five) a week for the last three years and four months in the hope to visit your country, I can't wait.

Jim...you got a lot of long-winded answers. Here is the short one:
Get the Kaito 1103. It is superior to the Sony in many ways and at a much better price. The SSB is totally acceptable and the audio is far superior to the Sony, especially on good quality earphones.

Are you by chance using a loop? IMO, you should be able to break those signals up and decipher amongst the two....maybe three.

The HQ145XC is an extremely nice piece and coupled with a nice loop....is almost tailor made for that scenario.

There was one other site I used to have ( I think one of the most helpful sites for me at least because it made the hobby a little easier....made it almost

I have the Terk/Radio Shack passive loop for use on my portables. How could I use that with the HQ?
I believe that South Florida gets "targeted" by the Cuban AM'ers. Doesn't the Cuban 880 have something like 100,000kW's?
Hopefully, when "winter" comes to Florida I can try for the East Coast AM stations. I was listening to WPHT, 1210, and then it got swamped by a Cuban station! Can't win here!

Larb, Lord only knows. I knew after I saw him appear here and then he made his "heartfelt" plea/question between the two receivers...lol...I don't know.

After all the "action" that had went down in here the previous three weeks or so before Brian's appearance I didn't want to come off worse than I may have already appeared after the episode with Bryant.

I decided to go along and "play the game" in helping him thinking all along it was just typical Brian, the part that I don't get is why in the world did he decide to "bring his game" into RRS. Quite a few took his posts hook line and sinker, though there were a few who didn't buy into it ie; Dave and I'm sure a few others that didn't express their thoughts as Dave did.

I feel he truly has a deep down physcological problem because no one (that I know of) "speaks" the way he does in his posts, it comes off so phoney that in reading it.....I actually feel embarrased and "uncomfortable" when I read his dramatized posts.

Who knows - - he may make another dramatic entrance and plea, it wouldn't surprise me.

What I don't understand is why in the world hasn't

He is one of THE MOST dangerous pastors ( I use that word VERY

Unless you are 'somewhat' studied in the word he

HAVANA — The former Cuban leader on Wednesday called the American[?] president's speech at the United Nations "brave" and said no other American head of state would have had the courage to make similar remarks.

"Its hundreds of military bases installed in dozens of countries on all the continents, its aircraft carriers and naval fleet, its thousands of nuclear arms, its wars of conquest, its military industrial complex and its arms trading are not compatible with the survival of our species," he wrote.

Obama also was praised by Russian [KGB] Prime Minister Vladimir Putin earlier this month for canceling parts of a missile defense system that Moscow had viewed as a threat to its security. Putin called the move a "right and brave decision."

The Art of Corruption

There are all kinds of corruption. Some are pretty easy to identify. You can't miss it when a congressman sells the public's vote for money, say, or a husband sets his personal promises at nothing in order to score some extracurricular sex. But the slow rot that enters the soul of individuals when the tendrils of the state overcreep the life of a society—that's a little tougher to define. It may just be the toadying deference that steals into your behavior with the guard who searches you at the airport. Or it could be the baksheesh you pay the safety inspector to keep your business from being shut down. But as subtle as the effects may be, the rule is ironclad: the more areas of life are funded and regulated by government, the less free you are, and the more corrupt and servile you ultimately become.

Through the work of artist and blogger Patrick Courrielche, Andrew Breitbart's new website Big Government http://biggovernment.com/ — reporting the news so the mainstream media won't have to—has just released a sickening transcript of an August 10 conference call jointly hosted by the National Endowment for the Arts, the White House's Office of Public Engagement, and United We Serve, an initiative overseen by the Corporation for National and Community Service, a federal agency. The purpose of the call was to urge a group of pro-Obama artists to get out there and start creating art that would support the president's agenda on health care, the environment, education, and community services. Speaking at the request of "folks in the White House and folks in the NEA," Michael Skolnick, political director for Obama-mad hip-hop mogul Russell Simmons, told the assembled artists, "All of us who are on this phone call were selected for a reason, and you are the ones that lead by example in your communities. You are the thought leaders. You are the ones that, if you create a piece of art, or promote a piece of art or create a campaign for a company, and tell our country and our young people sort of what do and what to be into, and what's cool and what's not cool."

As an artist, I feel it incumbent upon myself to pause here to become violently ill. Never mind that the phone call may have broken several lobbying laws. Forget that the NEA's Yosi Sergant is now proven to have lied when he denied the NEA's role in initiating the call. Let's not even concern ourselves with the fact that White House official Buffy Wicks directed the artists to channel their efforts through Serve.gov, a White House website with ties to the corrupt Acorn.

No, let's just talk about art. It's hard out here on us creative types right now. When times are tough, truth and beauty sink pretty low on the national shopping list. The NEA, according to its own website, is "the nation's largest annual funder of the arts." It gives tens of millions of dollars a year in grants to artists and art organizations. It does this, according to the legislation that established it, to "help create and sustain not only a climate encouraging freedom of thought, imagination, and inquiry but also the material conditions facilitating the release of this creative talent." It is there, in other words, to protect artists' freedom from the corrupting influence of financial deprivation.

The transcript of this phone call proves that the NEA has deeply betrayed that mission. Corrupted by the White House, it has moved to corrupt the artists who look to it for their daily bread. It doesn't matter that it didn't actually offer these artists money in exchange for propaganda; its very presence on the line constituted an implied offer of access. It doesn't matter that the artists on the call were already Obama supporters. Simply by presenting a mission that excluded those who did not support the president's agenda, the NEA violated the very first principle of its establishing legislation: "The arts and the humanities belong to all the people of the United States."

And whether or not these artists will bite into the apple of governmental corruption—whether or not they'll allow their creativity to be guided by the blandishments of the state—the phone call is proof of the depths of this administration's intentions to corrupt. It seeks, as statist government always seeks, to modify and control human behavior through the doling out and withholding of money and favor. And in seeking to enlist the arts, it has taken this overbearing and ultimately corrupting practice to the deepest and most spiritual level we know.

Just purchased a G3 yesterday, and put it through its paces last evening and this morning. Afraid to say it does not compare to the E/G5 that I traded in. SSB is so touchy that ham signals are a pain to resolve, and so far Sync detection jumps all over the place and doesn't help at all on AM except in a few very limited cases. Electrical interference at my location can be horrendous, and the E3 proves it. Spurios electrical interference trashes any possibility of using the SSB mode. AM shortwave appears to be not too bad but nearby AM band station ghosts through into SW and even FM !!
The G5 had none of these problems, and though it has a few less "features", it is a far superior receiver IMHO.
The G3 goes back for a refund shortly. Too bad. The G5 is a good receiver, and the Satellit 750, which I own, is a very fine receiver, and I am rather disappointed with Eton/Grundig that they did not, in MHO, come up with a very good offering in the G3.
Good Listening from SW4ever...

Yes, it has the mini-plug and the tuning knob. I tried that, taking the wire and connecting it to the antenna screw on the HQ, but it wouldn't bring in any signals at all, not even locals.

"Struble: Radio Is the Last Analog Medium Standing"

"HD Radio portables – No one's buying a lot of transistor radios anymore. The headphone radios that people used to run around the park with are all gone, and if radio wants to continue to be a reach medium, they've got to be in the devices people carry, which increasingly are cell phones, MP3 players, personal navigation devices... Insignia HD – I think this will be a nice little interim step for jogging or working out. It proves the viability [of the technology] and hopefully we'll get sales; but no, this is not going to sell in the hundreds of thousands... Radio alone – the sad reality of where it is – as a standalone device, it just doesn't exist anymore as a category. Nobody goes into Best Buy and says 'Where's the radio department?'"

Kind-a funny. republican'ts started the Iraq war when we could not afford it. no child left behind was started but they never allotted any money. The GOP raided SS and medicare/aid since the 70s to balance the budget! very fiscally unresponsible.

The Dems handed the republican't party (in 2001) a country that was in the black for the first time in many years and they fucked it up pretty bad but yet blame the last 6 months on the Dems.

Just got one of these. When I pulled it out of the box all it did was light up the backlight on the display. I found online that this indicates a bad backup battery. I figured this must be separate from the memory backup batteries, lest the radio crap out when those batteries were pulled for replacement, but all I could find were those batteries.

So, I disconnected the memory backup batteries, pulled the AC plug, left it all with no power for a couple minutes, and then reconnected the memory backup batteries and plugged it in. AHA! I got a display! And the VFO frequency changed with the dial, but still no sound, and the display was blinking.

I noticed the fine tuning control, and centered that, just because I'm that nit-picky. Checking that the control was indeed in its center position, I continued to turn it to the right, and my display stopped blinking, and I got audio. Turning it back to the left, I found that I lost audio and the display started blinking again at a point just past the center of the control.

I readjusted the control to just the point where it was stable, and started tuning around, and the radio works fine on all frequencies (like I can really TELL with my noise level!)

So, my question is, since I have no schematic and so have no way to track the problem down, how do I correct this problem, which I assume is the PLL going out of lock when the fine tuning control is rotated much past the center to the left? The radio seems to be great other than this minor flaw, and I would like to get it fixed.

It is also noted that the problem does not seem to present itself in either SSB mode, where I can fine tune all the way to either end of the control without the PLL going out of lock.

Thanks to Bob Dobbs and RHF for the heads up on HRO. My son took me there yesterday, it's a small store in a very downmarket area. Cluttered with merchandise that is not marked it was difficult to see anything - not like the lovely Fry's at all, so I was a bit disappointed and only came away with a Monitoring times and QST.

Since I got on the Delta airliner I was surprised to find everything in the US is now in two languages!!! even the food and other packaging is in two languages. Looks like when my grandson goes to school he will have to learn Spanish??!!

I had another long sweep on SW but found very little, just a few Spanish stations and two hot gospelers in English.

AM MW is quite exciting for this bush baby as many of the stations I hear so weakly in Africa I can now hear clearly on my ultralight Grundig G8 Traveller II. Have now got ten states on MW, but am awed that some fella's have all the 48 states and some even logged 700 AM MW stations = quite amazing and really hard work and a lot of skill and patience. I salute these DXer's for their great achievements.

Well off home again on Tuesday and the 32 hours door to door travelling is not to be looked forward to.

Have fun and good DX to all

So, you're finally admitting to your racism, albeit in a back-handed manner.

As a supposed native American minority yourself, I thought you would be a little more accepting of our President...but I guess we should know by

Hi,

I'm trying to repair an ICF-SW100 SW radio: both of its flexible pcbs are broken.

Sony's repair set includes these flexible pcbs, a new front part for the lid housing, and a vinyl flexible cable protector with an adhesive stripe:

<http://www.bilder-hochladen.net/files/12b4-4c-jpg.html>

(The side length of the squares is 0.2 inches.)

Unfortunately there's no description where to mount/fasten this cable protector. Can somebody here help me? That would be great!

TIA

"Compromise Reached on Near-Term FM IBOC Power Increase"

"Biquity’s Jeff Detweiler said at a Friday session here in Philadelphia at the NAB Radio Show that both sides can agree on a 6 dB increase (to –14 dB digital power) as a first step towards a full 10 dB digital rise. IBiquity had proposed such a compromise earlier and now after completing several studies on the effects of various power levels, NPR agrees."

http://tinyurl.com/ydyec5z

"CPB/NPR to Fit Square HD Peg Into Round Hole"

"First, National Public Radio (through the CPB) has already extensively studied this issue, more than anyone else in the industry, and the results are pretty unequivocal that increasing the power of a station's FM digital signal will adversely affect not only its own analog host-signal, but also those of neighboring stations. So much so, in fact, that the (first) study's coordinating engineer has admitted in other fora that an increase in HD sideband power levels is much more likely to do harm than good."

http://www.diymedia.net/archive/0409.htm#042909

Big surprise - NPR caves to iBiquity, agrees to trash their own analog signals. FM and AM are now trashed - LOL!

I have a storm door I bought at Goodwill.It has an aluminum frame and glass, I guess it is tempered glass.I want to replace my front screen door with the storm door.

What is the name of that thin plastic one way mirror stuff? I want to buy some of that stuff and put it on the glass, inside of the door so I can see out, but nobody outside can see in.Who sells that stuff?

"Compromise Report on FM IBOC Power Increase Premature?"

"This is an update to an earlier report of a compromise that appeared in RW Newsbytes. Apparently there is not a compromise on IBOC power, at least yet, between NPR and iBiquity... While a 6 dB increase (to − 14 dB digital power) has been suggested by iBiquity, NPR has not agreed on a specific figure, its officials emphasize. There has been a great deal of private and informal discussion over the contentious topic leading up to, and during, this week's convention and related engineering sessions and public radio engineering meetings. Some of the tone of the debate has been rancorous."

Just let me explain something to you Ole' Mighty Larb so you don't give "someones" in here reason to pick apart your posts in response to a "ham."

Brian isn't/wasn't/nor will ever be a 'ham' so too speak. He is/ or was trying to make people think he was/is a SWL (Short Wave Listener.)

Not that there is anything wrong with just being a SWL....I could have passed the HAM test fifty times over, but I don't feel the need (at least for now) to TX (meaning Transmit- meaning key up and talk to someone.)

I just like listening as most do in this group but there are some HAMS in here also. Just saying.

Not new.. just new to me. Last NEW radio I bought was an Eton E1-XM (should have bought the non-XM model, since I got no use for XM over here). With my new shop up on the roof of the house, I may be able to wrangle a bit quieter antenna setup.. a nice vertical should be great..

Got a second E1-XM a while back. Got it cheap, and even after paying Drake to fix it (CPU was froze up), I have less than $200 in it. Pretty decent deal, considering I even got the XM tuner with this one (still can't use it, but it's there).

Hello,

Many thanks for your offer but I'm afraid it won't except it's a new version. I already have such a manual (7.67 MB, "Ver. 1.1 2005.11", 52 pages). In the upper right corner of the exploded view

<http://www.bilder-hochladen.net/files/12b4-4f-jpg.html>

one can find a part (#45, "PLATE, BLIND") resembling the part which can be seen on my photo, but still: where to fasten/mount?

Greetings

Found the problem. The schematic that Toxic linked me too helped a lot (amazing how much easier it is to track things down with paperwork). The problem ended up being a coil in the circuit with the fine tuning and crystal was just in need of a (very) minor tweak. Less than 1/8 turn of the slug and the oscillator snapped to life as stable as you please. Now I can just pray for a power failure so I can hear something below S-7. RCI on 11240 was 60dB over S-9 and clear as a bell (I could hear them on a crystal set).

Thanks for the help. :)

I work for a glass company, and I bought film from CR Laurence: Silver Reflective to keep the UVs out. Florida is hot and I can't [don't want to] afford the energy bills. If you want assistance in how to film the glass, let me know.

Make sure you have:
squirt bottle dawn dish wash soap single-edged razor blades water a second pair of hands

slade
[the glass is tempered if it's legal]

Last Tuesday of this week, I got a new safety sticker on my 1978 Dodge van.I drove my van about one mile, then I stopped and I put more water in the radiator.I did the same thing on my way back home to doggy's couch.Someday, when I get time, I am going to fix that water leak.That means I will have to remove a bunch of stuff from the front of the engine (318 cubic inches V8 engine) to find out exactly where it is leaking water.I think it is leaking from the edge of the timing chain cover thingy, that thingy (it is a big thingy that the water pump and some other stuff bolts on to on there) also is part of the water cooling gallery, at the top part up there.Maybe I can buy a better timing chain cover thingy at one of the local auto junk yards around here.

From the looks of the diagram of exploded parts and information below, it seems that part #45 would be laid over the cable at the point where the clearance problem was cutting the ribbon.

http://images.google.ca/imgres?imgurl=http://static.samspade.org/mirror/www.tesp.com/images/ribbon1.gif&imgrefurl=http://static.samspade.org/mirror/www.tesp.com/SW100FAQ.htm&usg=__ZzEijrEuRYkZDoXllxi0aiOfhBs=&h=176&w=800&sz=55&hl=en&start=11&tbnid=B_d8T6LdKpHy9M:&tbnh=31&tbnw=143&prev=/images%3Fq%3Dsony%2Bsw-100%26gbv%3D2%26hl%3Den%26sa%3DG

Why it happens

The edge of the plastic at the point on the lid module where the ribbon cables exit is very sharp. In a test, it functioned as an efficient wire cutter for 30-gauge bare copper wire. When the lid is closed, the inner ("Key") ribbon cable is pulled taut and makes a bend of over 90 degrees with a bending radius of, essentially, zero.

Copper does not forgive this sort of insult. Over time, the key ribbon cable will develop breaks in the copper conductors, which will cause various keys on the keyboard to stop working, including the on/off switch. The Signal ribbon cable may also develop problems -- I have observed this in one case so far.

From Eham.net: http://www.eham.net/reviews/detail/1309

Last year I found out that SONY has a complete repair/mod kit to fix the ribbon cable problem. Includes a new top cover, ribbon cables and such that solve the clearance probleme that was cutting the ribbon. Works great now.

FIX:

Bottom of page: If you have to fix yours yourself, be sure to make the slots that the cable fits thru bigger and add a piece of masking tape around the cables where they pass thru the slots so it doesn't happen a second time.

sony: ICF-SW100 (ICFSW100); typical failure

http://www.radiomuseum.org/forum/sony_icf_sw100_icfsw100_typical_failure.html

Early production samples of this radio tend to fail, a copper ribbon cable connecting the lower and the upper part of the radio will be bent repetitively over a very sharp edge of the lid. After a while, the copper ribbon cable connections are likely to break, some of the keys will become inoperational, sometimes this will happen even to the on/off - button.

Rarely the signal ribbon cable will brake.

You might recognize the early ICF-SW100 sets by the copper connector, that can bee seen in the gap, in later models produced after autumn 1997, You see a black plastic cover over the connector and the lid mould has been changed.

You might try to repair Your set using a file to dull the sharp plastic edges where the connector will have to get past. There has been a Sony repair kit for these early models with a different lid mould.

Napa and probably most other auto parts stores sell this window tint. Some Usually found in the Van customization area.

Hi John,

It's good to hear you are doing OK in rain-drenched Atlanta! Here in the Seattle vicinity we have a reputation for rain, rain, rain...but it rarely comes down in buckets like it does in the southeast USA.

Well, at least Atlanta HAS an amateur radio store! The last one in Seattle folded years ago. Amateur Radio Supply in the Georgetown area near Boeing Field was also somewhat cluttered and uninviting, but still I enjoyed going there to see what was new.

You commented about finding very little on SW compared to your South Africa home. In fact, you are in a part of the USA that has more on the SW bands than much of the country. The Southeast has the benefit of better Latin DX to the south, and European/African DX to the east. In comparison, my Pacific Northwest part of the country is more signal starved. In trips I've made across the country I've really noticed the difference. There are times I've tuned 60 meters from here on a good portable and found nothing more than WWV and a Brazilian station or two. My Perseus rigs reveal a few more stations, but it is really slim pickings compared to the 1980s and 1990s. That's the main reason why I mostly DX the foreign medium wave stations now.

Have a good trip back to Montagu, and I hope it's not too tiring!

Wow, I asked a question and went away for a while....and came back to all these responses. I had heard shortwave is not what is used to be but the size of the response here is testament that shortwave is still very alive indeed, and based on that, I will continue checking this new hobby out.

And a side note, I'd about given up on usenet/group/whatever. But this response has also renewed my faith in usenet, or whatever we are now. BTW, rec.music.theory is my offspring, long ago. Glad to see there is still good stuff on the groups.

I haven't had a chance to read the thread but look forward to doing so later this evening.

Hi all

I think I found out :-)!

As can be seen in the exploded view

<http://www.bilder-hochladen.net/files/12b4-4h-jpg.html>

the foil has to be put through the slot for the flexible pcbs (green arrow); the adhesive stripe (light blue, of course on the underside of the foil) has to be fastened where the red line is drawn. In this way the foil prevents that the flexible pcbs can be seen when the lid is open.

Thanks for your help!

Bye

Consumers have shown little interest in HD. Power increase? for what?
nobody is listening! Advertisers aren't supporting HD radio! Sure broadcasters upgrade your signal and blow more investment on a dog..

IP radio is digital and consumers have show more interest being able to control the content.. they want to build their own playlist.. And Ip radio works!

Hi Jim.

Welcome to the hobby. no, shortwave is not dead. don't waste your time with the neo-trolls. you might want to check out the groups on yahoo. 100's of radio/ receiver/and short wave groups there. no spam, no trolls and no phony crap. just be careful, short wave can become an obsession.

I was with Geico for one day. My friend was delivering my truck from the dealership and got run off the road by a drunk, rolled the sucker a couple times. He was OK. The truck was totaled. Geico paid in full, even though they had not received one red cent from me.

I cannot over-emphasize the importance of having a superior receiver in these times. While there are still a few powerhouse HFBC stations, receiving them is no great achievement. Utility monitoring is where you really get into the hardware and the technology. Planes, Hams, Military, Beacons, etc. are quite challenging. Risk = Reward.

A portable along the lines of an ICF-2010, a Satellit-800, an E1, etc., are the bare minimum for such serious listening. Any true "communications receiver" style desktop, fro the Post War era forward, will provide endless fascination, IMHO.

Dear Sir,

I respectfully disagree with you. In my opinion the audio quality of the Sony ICF-SW7600GR is not what I would characterize as terrible. Mediocre for music on FM? Yes. But for the human voice, that to which most shortwave listeners tune, the audio response is quite good - crisp, clear, and full. This makes station identification quite easy and better than on some other receivers. And music via the shortwaves is not bad either.

I agree with you that I have heard shortwave receivers with better sound quality and I also agree that this is one of the Sony's weakest attributes. Yet it is easily corrected in one of two ways, both relatively inexpensive. Merely purchase a stereo 3.5mm to 3.5mm audio extension cable and attach the radio to your stereo system through its line output. Then you'll have sound quality limited only by your system (and with stereo on FM IF you remember to plug in a headphone into the headphone jack when using the line output - see page 33 of the owner's manual). Or you could purchase a pair of amplified computer speakers (some of which are very small and quite suitable for travel) and attach them to the line output. (I have done both and both greatly improve the music sound quality of this radio though they really don't do much to improve human voice intelligibility on shortwave; it is already fine through the internal speaker.)

I must mention also that the greatest sound quality in the world is of no use if you can't bring in the [MW or SW] station clearly. With the Sony's synchronous detection circuit in your armamentarium, you have another tool which can often make the difference between hearing a station or not hearing a station clearly. No other currently available compact portable shortwave receiver anywhere near this price has this feature operating properly as does the Sony.

The Kaito KA-1103 is a very good buy at $89.95 (Grove's current price). But, IN MY OPINION, the Sony is by far the better overall receiver.

Your choice ...

Best,

Joe

The advertising is paid for with profits on invested float. The amount spent on advertising pales compared to the amount taken in profits on that investment.

I have an old school phone line. I have measured service for $6.50/month. You want a copper pair if you can get one, especially if you're getting old and live alone. 9-1-1 isn't reliable any other way.

They still have to maintain landlines for their ADSL and TV over phone line services. Don't believe for a minute that they will toss out their cash

They're moving to bundled voice-internet-TV. When ATT installs U-Verse, around here, the first thing they do is cut the copper. In many cases, if possible, they remove the drop line from the pole, so the pair can't be reactivated. Verizon cuts the copper when they install FiOS. Comcast cuts ATT's copper when they install their bundle.

The intent is eventually to have fibre installed to the house.

ATT sent representatives into my neighborhood going door to door to inform customers that they were removing copper pair, and suggesting that all customers move to U-Verse. I told them to pound sand. I was informed that my copper would remain intact for the time being. But that it was to be phased out in the coming year and I would have no choice but to install a ComCast or U-Verse bundle.

When I informed them I had a T-1 and was not interested in either cable or their data service, I was told in no uncertain terms that I don't get a choice in the matter when the time comes. And that landline service would ONLY be available with a cable-internet bundle.

Sounds like time to contact your state's Public Utilities commission or equivalent. Phone service is a publicly regulated utility, and I'm pretty sure all state and federal law says they can't force you to take other services you do not want or need.

Yet another reason to stay with copper all the way to the C.O.:

Power.

With copper, you get talk battery from the C.O. and the C.O. has a large battery supply and a Diesel turbine/generator to keep those batteries charged -- and keep your phone service going when you need 9-1-1.

If you get phone service from the U-verse V-rad (video remote access device) or from a neighborhood SLC (subscriber loop carrier), you only have a few hours of local battery until you lose dial tone. If you have a -localized- power failure, the telco can dispatch someone with new batteries or a temporary generator. However, if it is a MAJOR power failure like we had a few years ago, there aren't enough employees with generators to go around. You are screwed, while the guy on copper still has service.

U Verse is twisted pair from a box in your neighborhood. Fiber to the Node.

My thinking, exactly. However, Verizon has been doing this for two years, now, without action. ATT has been doing it for a year in this area, without action. Comcast has been doing it since they started offering phone service. And without action.

Either they're exploiting a loophole in the public utilities laws, or the PUC simply can't be motivated to take action.

I've written letters. Made phone calls. I'm not taking this without a scrap.

And I've got the same advantage that Chris Condon had in the 70's when SWB attempted to jack his mother's rates by 400% when the company unilaterally did away with party lines in southeast Missouri: I'm Media.

Precisely my thinking. Even my T-1 has battery voltage on it, to power the SmartJack.

It's unconscionable that local phone would be so dependent on local power.

The only place they do FTTP is where no copper pair ever existed, e.g.
new housing.

That divorced Bell South woman who used to live next door to me a few years ago, and she moved back to Natchez.(can't blame her for that!) She gave me her cell phone number when she used to live next door.I didn't ask her for her cell phone number.I will see can I phone her tonight and ask her.

Thingy is though, she also gave her cell phone number to some kids (brats) who used to live across the street from doggy's couch.She once told me those damn kids were bugging the hell out of her, calling her on her cell phone.I suppose she has changed her cell phone number since then.

This was recently discussed in comp.dcom.telecom and the consensus was that such assertions were FUD. Please consider providing some evidence of this practice, and also consider contributing your observations

My statements have been based on personal observations of the 'installation' process in my neighborhood. Comcast definitely cuts the copper.

Verizon's website has a notation in it's FiOS FAQ about it.

ATT has so far presented no documents relating to this, but when my g/f had her U-Verse installed, they cut the copper and removed the drop from the building.

ATT reps are hitting me up monthly to make the conversion, and to motivate me, the statements noted were made. If that's FUD, which it may be, given the source, there is support in my observations of the installations I've had experience with.

I'll be taking photos where I can during an installation. Video, if I can get into a position for meaningful context.

What I was talkin about, I want the car to look like a Real PIG.
Oink, Oink, Oink,,,,,,

There used to be a truck around here which looked just like a Locomotive.It used to be used in Parades.Sometimes, if I was driving on O'Ferrel Street (O'Ferrel Street is in a residential part of Jackson, about two sumpin miles East behind doggy's couch, the North end of the Street runs into Capitol Street) I would see that Locomotive/truck parked in a driveway over there.

Of course, everybody has seen the Oscar Mayer Weinermobile before. One time, about eight years ago, the Weinermobile was parked in front of the Wal Mart store where I do my food shopping.They were letting people walk around in there checkin it out.They gave me two cupons, each cupon good for a dollar saving on Oscar Mayer products, and they gave me a little bitty Weinermobile plastic whistle that looks just like the Weinermobile.I still have that little Weinermobile plastic whistle.

Well, sorta correct. Twisted pair (copper) back to the V-rad or SLC. (~ 3.5 kilofoot limitation for U-verse service). Then fiber back to the C.O. (central office), not "node".

This is quite puzzling...what did they replace the drop with? Another piece of copper? Fiber? Or, when you say "building", do you mean a large apartment complex, large enough to support/justify its own V-rad?

The "standard" U-verse architecture is copper from the home to the V-rad. I guess it's possible that in some parts of the country, they are running fiber to the home (although for years, that has not proven to be cost effective due to the optical to electrical conversion required at each and every house).

Building--The house. Private residence. They ran a data line, removed the analog copper. Replaced one drop with another. The installer said the goal is eventually to connect fibre to the building.

That's what Verizon is doing with FiOS, and ATT is doing in some areas.

Watching FAUX news and Limpballs seem to get the alzheimer folks pissed off and they end up posting here.

How unfortunate that these people don't have the brains to figure out what side the bread is buttered on and have to rely on a network owned by someone who has 80% of their investments overseas and would benefit hugely from america's failure. For that matter, most of corporate america has their money overseas and can't care less what happens to you. They are spending $$BILLIONS to make sure you die quicker. Nice well KBC was transmitting... 2 hours a week toward North America??

I'd be surprised if 2 people even listened to it to be honest on a regular. Sure, some would want to catch it just to DX it but shortwave stations aren't in the business of Dxing, they are in the business of people sticking to the channel and listening.

Huh? Ran a "data line"? Whatever do you mean by that? You really haven't addressed the issue or defined the problem. Do you mean a -fiber- "data line" or a -copper- "data line"?

You seemed to be all in a tizzy that they "cut the copper".

It sounds to me that they just replaced it with another piece of copper. If they were just replacing the old drop (which may have been defective, full of squirrel bites or whatever) with a new drop, what's the problem with that?

Replaced twisted pair with Cat 6.

In other areas, they're replacing twisted pair with fibre.

You're being obtuse. Maybe this will help:

They removed the analog phone line. And replaced it with part of a digital voice, data, tv bundle.

No analog phone. Period.

Now THERE'S your problem!

Nothing digital is ever reliable to the extent that the analog it replaces is/was. About the closest they get is CD/mp3 audio, which is fairly reliable, but each has drawbacks. Even if you got no electricity or batteries, you could still play a vinyl (or bakelite or whatever) record... all this fanciful digital hoo-haw will fail us when we need it most. Sure, it's nice to be able to lug around a lifetime's music collection on a device smaller than a pack of cigarettes.. but..

So? Cat 6 IS copper "twisted pair", albeit with a very tight twist.

> In other areas, they're replacing twisted pair with fibre.

They are replacing a lot of -trunk- cable with fiber. As stated previously, I would be surprised if they are feeding each and every home with fiber due to the great expense of providing an optical to electrical conversion at each house.

To be correct, eliminate confusion and be less obtuse, you should have stated that they were removing analog phone service, not 'line'. A Cat 6 'line' will work just fine for analog service.

As a presumably technical person, I'm sure you can appreciate the value of using the correct terminology and providing a clear description of the problem.

> And replaced it with part of a > digital voice, data, tv bundle.

As stated by another poster, this would seem to be grounds for going to your state utilities commission.

> No analog phone. Period.

By "digital voice" and "no analog phone", do you mean they are FORCING you to use VOIP (voice over internet protocol), the only kind of 'digital' voice provided by the telco.? If so, off to the Commission.

0200-0258utc on Sunday only 6110 out of Lithuania targeting North America. I haven't listened for them in months but have them logged back in Feb of 2009. I believe they were targeting North America 2

It was daily on 6055 one hour a day targeting Europe.

Yes, that's right, forgot about that one, and still on the current EiBi list. I do recall now listening to that one once or twice, though past my usual bedtime.

The 2130 broadcast generally came in well here in the winter time, and in checking yesterday should put in a fair enough signal for their final broadcast tomorrow on 6055.

Fiber-to-the-cabinet or fiber-to-the-curb (both abbreviated as FTTC, although FTTCab is sometimes also used) - fiber is terminated in a street cabinet typically closer than 300m of the customer premises, with the final connection being copper.
Fiber-to-the-node (FTTN) - this is very similar to FTTC, but the street cabinet is further away from the user's premises; it can be up to several kilometers away.

back to Mexico if the games were held there?

Yes, I am being sarcastic, although since America is so guilty that it needs apologizing by Mr. Obama for all of the "wrongs of the world" committed by America, I sincerely believe it should be decades before the United States hosts the games again, that would be punishment that we "deserve"? When was the last time London had it?

1162. Repair facility for Sony SW-07 (Besides Laredo)?

Hi folks,

I inadvertently pulled out the whip antenna to my Sony SW-07 a couple of weeks ago. It got loose over time, and when attempting to fix it, I totally pulled it out of the radio! Anyway, the radio now works (and not all the time) only when you physically hold the antenna in the radio so that the inside end of the antenna touches some sort of internal connection under the speaker holes.

I really like this radio, and I want to get it fixed! However, I really would rather not deal with the Sony repair facility in Laredo, TX. I've had dealings with them before and felt their customer service was really lacking, and I had to really ride them in order to get my previous repairs done correctly and in a timely manner.

Is there another entity out there in shortwave radioland that can repair my unit? All it's good for now is being a digital radio. I used to listen to the SW-07 late at nite before going to sleep (next to my pillow), so using the other larger antenna at night would be cumbersome.

Thanks,

Jean in VA

Ehhhhh,,,, I am busy fixin thingys around here.Thi (Thi ~ James Cagner,,, Now hear Thi!) mawnin, I replaced a boint out electric outlet socket in my carport.Yesteryday mawnin, my old buddy gave me a Sears gas engine weed trimmer.The starter rope had broken and he said there is no way to fix it.I reckon he never saw them Allen head screws that holds that thar plastic shroud on there.I am going to fix that and also buy a new spark plug because he had removed that spark plug and stuck it in his other gas engine weed trimmer.

And then I am going to remove the carburetor from my 1976 made in Germany Hercules Moped (it has Bicycle pedals on it. www.mopedarmy.com 1976 Hercules Westlake Moped) and clean it out with Gumout carburetor cleaner and gits my Moped runnin.And then I am goin to gits back to woikin on my old light weight SpeedAire portable air compressor.I always finds me thangs tah doo ahhroun hyr.

I got a note to myself here,- #3067 to #5642 were the trouble units.
now, this was from 2 or 3 years ago, so it may have added more. you might want to check the E1XM yahoo group. mine was an early unit, s/n 2315. have had no trouble with my unit, and i prob don't have more than 10 hours on it. also, watch the wall-wort, some were crap.
you really should go to the yahoo group, some people went thru 3 and 4 units before getting a good one. Drake did the service on these, and some people sent them back a few times. if i had to do it over, i would have passed on this one. crap, one more thing, don't charge the batteries in the radio, they had a few melt downs.

Must have been some possible mix-up on the date as no KBC heard here at 2130 on 6055.

I tuned in for just a moment yesterday to check propagation and it was fair.

Perhaps yesterday was their last broadcast, though it was 9-29...?

1185. New FCC Chairman Targets internet

New Federal Communications Commission Chairman Julius Genachowski could have used a few more dollops of genuine humility in his Monday speech advocating enforceable “network neutrality” rules for the Internet. Despite declaring “we cannot know what tomorrow holds on the Internet,” he showed he intends to lead the FCC as if it were all-knowing. That will only end up choking the greatest engine of innovation in modern times.

Genachowski laid out his plans in a highly anticipated speech at the Brookings Institution in Washington, DC. The mostly voluntary concept of net neutrality — which encourages the free flow of content across the Internet — would be transformed into formal rules Internet service providers (ISPs) would violate at their peril.

Instead of managing traffic in response to market forces, ISPs would be forced to cede such decisions to the FCC, which would decide which practices are “fair” and “reasonable” on a “case-by-case basis.” But it would be foolish to replace the swift judgment of millions of consumers with the dictates of a handful of slow-footed, uninformed, unaccountable bureaucrats.

Universal Radio has them for 400 bucks and has a excellent rep for customer service. I'm sure they will test the E1 before shipping it to you. Just call them on the phone about your concerns. Good luck.

I found "Air America" t be quite boring with their logic and facts, so I stopped listening to them well before bthey went under..
Yes, we need more like Beck, Savage and Rush.

Hey I have that set too y'know! Of course it doesn't pull in anything
- we live in a steel-frame & masonry apt building on a busy street with telephone poles and wiring no more than 40 feet from our apartment! Not to mention digital cable boxes, off the air converter boxes, PC and laptops in half the apartments, etc. You expect any sw radio to work in such conditions??

Better watch out or that rapier tongue will poke a hole through the cheek it's placed so firmly against.

Laugh-In, yes.. but what this world really needs are the Smothers Brothers and Pat Paulsen "If nominated I will not run. If elected I will not serve."
I know someone else said it before him, but Pat had a way about him. :)

I see nothing wrong with prohibiting common carriers from censoring your internet. They took a big bite out-a usenet already

The GOP Hypocritical do-nothing party of NO!
They want to give all our constitutional rights to large trillion dollar corporations in the name of "not socialist"

These people can't think past their large beacon beer belly but find it easy to cut-n-paste content from the republiCAN'T propaganda machine.

Sorry bunch of folks. No brains to think for themselves.

For real. It's bad enough that they decide they're going to sell you 15Mb/s internet access, then throttle you back to 3 or 4 Mb, and sometimes even a few hundred Kb. Hopefully, that will now end.

Handy Shortwave Chart
Bill McFadden
billmc@agora.rdrop.com

Band allocations and time zone conversions for the USA. Includes broadcast bands used outside the USA. For multi-use bands, primary usage is shown. Some stations operate outside official bands. Information is from Oct 2005 FCC rules and Jan 2006 NTIA manual, see Chapter 4 of:
http://www.ntia.doc.gov/osmhome/redbook/redbook.html

Please e-mail suggestions and corrections to billmc@agora.rdrop.com.

Phone line as SW antenna
Bill McFadden
billmc@agora.rdrop.com

Changes preceded by "|".

Connecting unapproved devices to phone lines may be illegal in your area. Telephone lines present a potential shock hazard. Do not use this antenna for transmitting. Use at your own risk.

INTRODUCTION

This article describes how to use a phone line as a shortwave receiving antenna. Performance will vary depending on the kind of phone line you have. Overhead lines usually make okay antennas, while underground lines
| usually don't. Phone lines carrying DSL service may be unsuitable because
| DSL operates over a wide spectrum. A phone line antenna will generally pick up more power line noise than a dedicated antenna, so don't expect to | use it for DX work. Nevertheless, I found that it outperformed the
| telescopic whip antennas built into many portables.

A reader sent in this suggestion: If you're concerned about connecting the phone line directly to the receiver, try wrapping the phone cord several times around the receiver's telescopic whip antenna instead. Performance may not be as good as a direct connection, but it will probably be better than the whip antenna by itself.

Someone else wrote asking about lightning protection. I haven't thought much about it because thunderstorms are rare in my area. Most phone lines have lightning arrestors on them where they enter the house, but the lightning arrestors may pass enough energy during a lightning strike damage a receiver. My suggestion is to disconnect the antenna when not in use if you experience frequent thunderstorms.

HOW TO DO IT

The simplest connection is a single capacitor between the phone line and receiver. The capacitor eliminates all phone line voltages, including
| be rated 250 volts or higher.

Phone line RF connector
red .01 uF center cond. / \ or o--------||-----------------------------|-o | To receiver
green \ /
50 ohm coax |
ground |
or o-----------------------------------------+ N.C. shield

N.C. = no connect. I originally connected the phone line ground (yellow wire) to this terminal, but reception was better without it (if you do this, play it safe and put a .01 uF capacitor in series). If another ground is available, you can connect it to this terminal.

If you are picking up local AM or FM radio stations on the shortwave bands, it is likely that your receiver is overloaded. Inexpensive and portable receivers usually lack the filtering needed to eliminate this interference, but you can make your own filters. Filters can also be | purchased from shortwave dealers (see below for recommendations).

A high-pass filter can be used to remove signals below the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from local AM stations and presents a high impedance to the phone line at audio frequencies so that the phone line remains balanced.

A low-pass filter can be used to remove signals above the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from FM and TV stations, as well as VHF 2-way radio transmitters. If you use both filters, connect the output of the first filter to the input of the second (don't forget to connect their ground terminals together). It doesn't matter which filter is connected first.

These filters also work well with random wire antennas. Just connect the antenna in place of the phone line.

The filter(s) should be connected to the phone line in this manner:

Phone line RF connector
red -------- center cond. / \
or o----| |-------------------------|-o | To receiver
green | | \ /
| FILTER | 50 ohm coax |
ground | | |
or o----| |----------------------------+
N.C. -------- shield
```

FILTER PLANS

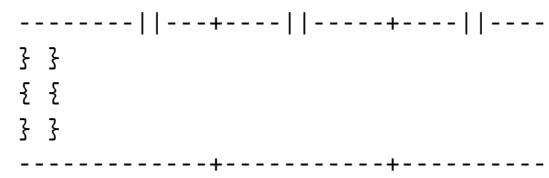
The original credit for the high-pass and low-pass filters goes to Paul Blumstein and John Shalamskas, respectively. Edited versions of their articles are included here:

Date: 09 Jan 91 00:54:08 GMT
From: paulb@harley.TTI.COM (Paul Blumstein)
Subject: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

The following ascii-schematic diagram is a high pass filter that will filter out Broadcast Band (MW) stations. I found it a great boon to my shortwave listening since local MW stations overload my ATS-803A front end & appear in SW, especially with a long antenna.

If you remember my antenna saga, I went from 50 feet to 150 feet & had overload problems causing me to cut back to 50 feet. (Even at 50 feet, I still have some MW interference). I took the advice of Gary Coffman and looked up filters in the ARRL Handbook. With the filter in place, I intend to try to increase my antenna length again.

Anywho, here is the filter, for interested parties.



The outer capacitors are 1500 pf ceramic disks.
The inner capacitor is 820 pf ceramic disk.
The squiggly things are coils (two total). Each one is 2.7 uh.
(a close value will do).

From: bill@videovax.tv.tek.com (William K. McFadden)
Subject: Re: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

I built the filter that Paul Blumstein posted recently and measured it on a gain-phase analyzer. Here are its characteristics:

100 kHz -120dB
500 kHz -68dB

1000 kHz -38dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2100 kHz -3dB

The source and load impedances were 50 ohms. Because the filter has five elements, the attenuation is 30dB per octave. The measurements confirmed this.

This filter seems to be a good compromise between interference attenuation and passband response. There is very little attenuation in the 120m band and above. It could use a little more attenuation at the upper end of MW, which could be done with more stages or a higher cutoff frequency. Alternatively, you could build two of these filters and put them in series. (Since two 1500pF capacitors in series are really 750pF, you could eliminate one cap.)

Just for fun, I put 470 ohms in series with the input to see how the filter performed with an antenna mismatch. The response was:

100 kHz -105dB
500 kHz -60dB
1000 kHz -35dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2300 kHz -3dB

These figures are normalized to the passband response of -15dB, which is due to the impedance mismatch between the source and load and would have been there without the filter. Hence, the filter works almost as well in spite of the mismatch, which is good news to those who use long-wire antennas.

From: johns@uhunix.uhcc.Hawaii.Edu (John Shalamskas)
Subject: Construction of filters for SW reception

Several people have asked for construction details of the filters I built for my DX-440.

The high-pass filter helped some, but in my location the VHF/UHF broadcasters are also causing problems. So, I dug out the ARRL handbook and chose a 7-element Chebyshev low-pass design that is -3 dB at 35 MHz, -20 dB at 43 MHz, and -50 dB at 64 MHz (all calculated; it works well in practice!)

chassis ground

I had to do a little more improvising at this point. I used .33 uH instead of .36, and .66 uH instead of .42, but it works fine.

The 5-lug terminal strips were perfect for these circuits, since there are 4 lugs plus a grounded lug. All "ground" connections go to the lug that is mounted to the chassis, and the other 4 lugs are used for each of the connections on the signal line. One terminal strip is used per filter. Since both filters were necessary to clean up the hash, I am going to put them both into one box when I get the time.

The proper way to connect them is in series, i.e.

signal in ------- filter 1 -------- filter 2 -------- signal out

There is no difference between ends. They are "bilateral" which means you can't possibly hook them up backwards. (In the above schematics,

COIL WINDING

You can make the coils yourself using this formula:

L = 0.2 * B^2 * N^2 / (3B + 9A + 10C)

L is the inductance, in uH
A is the length of the coil, in inches
B is the mean diameter of the coil, in inches
C is the diameter of the wire, in inches
N is the number of turns

For small wire, you can assume C = 0.

PARTS SOURCE

Parts for the filters can be obtained from the following source:

Most of the wall warts I've worked on that had the ground pin on them, didn't have that pin connected to anything inside. Basically, it was there to help hold the wart in the outlet.

Good deal Steve, I had the feeling you were going to respond before I could check some more.

I checked through http://home.centurytel.net/danielsampson/country.txt

What list did you get this from? It ticks me off when I know I've heard something before and I can't find it in my notes or any of my links.

They went silent for two minutes and they're back on. I have a great copy on them, is the signal intended for the states?

That is incredible dude, I definitely added that on my notes with a highliter and note of when I heard it and what you said along with the numerous youtube links.

I've never thought of searching youtube with that tag of "jammer" before, thanks Steve. I can just imagine what I'll find researching the " Sound of Hope."

Have you ever heard it before? My guess is that it would be damn near impossible. Talk about Chinese paranoia.

I kind of agree with what this one guy said on that youtube link I posted.

He said "what□ are you talking about? the firedrake-jammer is gone long time ago to the fact that olympics are over and i believe they only needed it for that. i sometimes receive it on 9000khz but thats just like broadcasting wonderful traditional - not jamming, and the signal is weak.
man, i really wish these good old days come back, with firedrake transmitter all over my radio... "
**********

I definitely don't agree in that he said the signal is weak though. I have my RF gain just cracked and my volume as low as it can be and the signal is bouncing from 5-7 and I don't even have it on the wide filter - - it'll sound even better on the wider filter.

I know it was off topic, but i had to pass it along. got that from my favorite "HOG" group. maybe my next project! i'd rather have a bumper car, than a go-round horse. cool.

Bah, Humbug! I never even watch the Olympics!

Say cuzz, when I was in Tokio (eight hours layover) in January 1964, some of us lean mean fightin machines went walking around to see the sights and also check out the wimmins.In the Ginza, we saw/I saw big mounds of dirt piled up along a street.I think they were adding on another Subway section.Was it the Olympics or the Worlds Fair that Tokio was gittin ready for?

I do not build AM directionals without plans. Solid state LPTV is pretty easy as there are are no stages that aren't broadbanded. There is very little tuning, even with a tube amp. AM directionals have "constants" that are determined by a PE or some such.

Dave, there may come a time when I do get interested in beacons, military, planes, etc.
My initial interest is in picking up broadcast shows though. The idea of talking back and forth with people around the world sounds great, but for now I'm just looking to listen. I don't much care for 90% of AM radio, and FM radio is just music. When I'm camping, or when at home, it would be great to listen to other broadcasts. If from other countries even better, but as long as it's interesting that's fine, maybe some news, maybe some music, I really don't know what I'll find.

I don't want to spend a lot of money until I get a better idea of whether there is indeed "stuff" to pick up that I like. But a more expensive setup could be in my future.

Thanks much,
Jim

Potato chips are verboten.

"Bogart" is not the correct verb unless one intends not to share said chips.

Alcohol and tobacco have done more damage to my non smoking friends than any amount of Pot smoke could ever do. I guess you believe the government when they tell you Pot is worse than booze or smokes.
The worst side effect of pot is getting arrested and being labeled a drug user by cops/attorneys/judges who mostly just get drunk, legally.

Nurk,
You have no reading comprehension. I did NOT say Coke or Meth, much less heroin or Morphine or anything else.
1. A lifetime of Tobacco smoking will kill or seriously impair you.
2. A lifetime of drinking will kill your brain and liver, then you.
3. A lifetime of toking may get you arrested.

I toke at bedtime and sleep much better.
I do not toke and drive.
I do not toke and attempt to work.
My IQ is not diminished by toking.

1252. type/length of wire and connectors for external antenna?

I'd like to try an external antenna, but one was not included with my G5. What type of wire should I get (stranded, solid, gauge, insulated...), and do I just solder it to the pos or neg lead of a miniplug to go into the ext antenna receptacle?

Thanks....

Your very extremely obvious low IQ is showing the more you post.
What did that have to do with anything I posted and/or what did it prove beyond your limited capacity? I'm not a doper or stoner, but I do know what works best for insomnia. One cup of coffee in the morning and I am good to go. Much better than addicting prescription drugs.
Notes;
Prescription drugs are usually addicting unless they do nothing.
Pot is neither addicting nor a 'gateway' drug.

Pot smoke vs tobacco smoke? Parts is parts and smoke is smoke -- and your lung parts are looking for oxygen, not smoke.

Please 'splain how pot smoke can't help but be harmful to your lungs.

A real answer please, no tap dancing.

Any length of wire is better than none, the longer the better and the higher the better. Keep it as far away from power lines as possible and try to make it as non-parallel to the power lines as possible.
Solder this wire, stranded 22-24 AWG works fine and is cheap enough to be disposable or to keep a roll in the car for and outing. Enamel insulation works fine between 2 insulators but I run mine through the trees and use rubber or Teflon coated.
If you want to get way over fancy you could build a matching box that had a mini-plug output and various inputs and ranges. That should keep you busy just scrounging up parts for a while, and be very educational.

A. My second major in college was chemistry.
B. I never smoke straight street dope since that is for dopes.
C. I dissolve out the plant goo from the cellulose that I don't want to smoke.
D. I separate out the tar and other stuff like Chlorophyll and and added chemicals to get pure THC.
E. If I am ambitious or have plenty of raw material I isomerize the THC cis-trans mix into the active stuff.
F. If I am really ambitious I can attach an acetate radical for about 50% greater bio-availability.
G. After all this you can't possibly take more than one hit off a bong or smoke more than 2 hits off a joint and still move.
H. Therefore it is totally impossible to smoke a pack a day.

Satisfied?
Actually my second major in college was any and all things scientific.
Passing the entrance requirements was 0.0000% of a problem.

Hi Guys,

Sorry that we've stopped our Short Wave transmissions. Chloé and me will miss reading out the reception reports we regularly received from North and South America, Australia, New Zealand, Russia, Italy, Sweden, Germany, Holland and of course the UK where the two of us recorded our programmes each week.

KBC hope to be moving to Medium Wave and changing our name ASAP. Then we'll be increasing our output to 7 or more hours a night, but unfortunately that won't be of any benefit to you guys. There are plans to go online as well but nothing definite yet. For further updates, visit the Website at www.kbcradio.eu

For those of you who would like to listen to any of the final week's shows again, they are available for download on this page: http://www.kbcradio.eu/?cat=14

Until we know for definite what is happening, the 'Chloé & Chirps' show will be broadcast via the Internet every Saturday on 'Big L' www.bigl.co.uk from 4pm-6pm UK time and repeated Tuesday night from 9pm-11pm UK time. We already have a number of regular listeners fro the USA.

There's also a list of various shows available to 'listen again' in the 'Announcements' section here: http://friendsofbigl.co.uk/forum/viewforum.php?f=4

Regards

Chirpy

Good post Bill. as an aside. too much wire, on a portable, can and will over-load. so, as Bill said, try a few things. sometimes 20 to 30 foot of wire out a window makes a big difference. lets us know how it works.

I forgot the overload thing. We have a local station at 1600 that overwhelms my RME DB-20 pre-selector but not the input to the Hammarlund HQ-129X for some reason. Maybe the Hammarlund was that far ahead of the pack back then. I have had some long wire antennas and wound them around the coils of tabletop radios and found there is a sweet spot where tuning isn't messed up and stations get a lot louder. That was done by adding or removing a turn of wire. There also had to be a ground for the other end of the antenna wire to be coupled. How to match a wire to a G5 is not in my experience.

It's a matter of proportion. Your lungs are insulted less because pot users inhale smoke less frequently compared to typical tobacco addicts.

You are on shortwave and bragging about welding? I picked it up in about 5 minutes then spent the rest of the week welding a project and learning as I went. Having 3 master welders to ask was a dream. They didn't mind answering questions as long as they did not have to fabricate the piece I was doing. 2 years of college should have gotten you a lot more education. I can Arc weld, MIG, TIG, wire feed, braze, plasma cut (even cuts a rock) and more after only 1 week of doing it for pay. There are metals I can't weld without more equipment than I can afford, but it was not anything that could count as more than 1 college credit.

My 2nd Major was in Chemistry and zerop problem on entrance exams...

Regarding Dope and his Stoner Status Baka explains how he "Juices Up" his GANJA...

.A. My second major in college was chemistry.
B. I never smoke straight street dope since that is for dopes.
C. I dissolve out the plant goo from the cellulose that I don't want to smoke.
D. I separate out the tar and other stuff like Chlorophyll and and added
chemicals to get pure THC.
E. If I am ambitious or have plenty of raw material I isomerize the THC
cis-trans mix into the active stuff.
F. If I am really ambitious I can attach an acetate radical for about 50% greater bio-availability.
G. After all this you can't possibly take more than one hit off a bong
or smoke more than 2 hits off a joint and still move.
H. Therefore it is totally impossible to smoke a pack a day.

Satisfied?

First, I did not waste the time to watch the clip.
Second, I don't care about the chest.
Third. I have 2 girls (18 (ding-a-ling) and 19 (genius)) I can have right now, but don't want.
Friends of my granddaughter.
Fourth, I'm 60 and married.
Fifth, I have a 14 year old discussing her sex life with me and waiting to turn 18 so she can give me a try. (???????????).
Katie is a uniquely intelligent and advanced girl and lets it be known.
What I don't know is if she is going to pursue an encounter when she does hit 18. Could be interesting.

The ones from the bottom end, Mensa, or some of the higher ones?

Always a sign or intelligence. This clown can't even put together a proper sentence.
No crap over the girls, please. They are real and I took them for bike rides and walks about 4-6 years ago and they were little then. What was a short 7 year old is now a 5'8" 13 year old and the rest were older. I have more potential action at 60 than I did when I was 16.
Kind of distracting.

I refine it and purify it, not juice it up. That would be like adding PCP to get more kick (and many more dead brain cells than alcohol).

I am not in the business since I have a legal income and don't want to

You know nothing at all about solvents that dissolve stuff but won't mix with each other? The good stuff stays in one solvent and the bad goes into the other.

.attatch an acetate radical for a 50% juice to the bio

Look at any pill bottle. Even simple Diphenhydramine has an HCl attached to it.

Welding is so simple it is for the brain dead. I couldn't do it for over a week due to terminal boredom. Now, If I am shortening a car chassis for the local races, that I can do, cut out a few feet and weld back together. No problemo.

I always get shit over this but it is true. The little girls I used to Shepard have grown out of the little girl stage. The 19 year old is going to be a corporate lawyer (her idea) and the 18 year old just wants to get pregnant and get a free ride (not from me!!!!).
I used to take anywhere from 3 to 8 all blond girls on field trips and walks and even taught them how to climb trees. Now they are getting to be not so little but they stay in touch.

Picking at straws again. I can refine it down to a drop of honey oil that will kick you ass all over the place. Smoking is not mandatory.
Brownies are good too, but way too easy to go overboard.

- Your lungs are insulted less because pot
- users inhale smoke less frequently
- compared to typical tobacco addicts.

Yeah generally Pot Smokers take fewer "Puffs"
Daily -verus- typical Tobacco Smokers.

But generally Pot Smokers "Puffs" are Inhaled Deeper -verus- typical Tobacco Smokers.

Often the result is that Pot Smokers fewer but deeper "Puffs" add-up to the same amount of Smoke-in-the-Lungs as the Tobacco Smokers.

The Components of most Smoke from the Burning

I can't believe the childish carp coming from some of the ultra right wingnuts. Cheering because Chicago, and therefore our country, lost a chance to host the Olympics. Some folks are so dead set that everything Obama has any hand in MUST fail, they throw out the country's best interests.

People really need to grow up. Ultra-partisanship does no one any good, it only serves to divide and destroy.

If the Olympics, or part of the Olympics, were being held right here, I doubt very much if I would go check it out.
I just do not care for the Olympics at all.
If that is childish, so be it.Over the last few years, the Olympics have been turning more and more childish.

Sicko?
I protected them from molesters when they were younger and they are turning 18 one by one. The present 18 year old liked to play grab ass and she is so dumb I want nothing to do with her. I am not starting anything, nor have I taken advantage of the obvious, so the sicko part is all in your head. Maybe the 19 year old when she visits from college, but not the rest. A 19 year old pre-law is as legal as it gets.

Pretty much what a plasma torch does except there is some residual flame after blasting through whatever. If you can cut with no flame wasted you have really fine tuned your mix and flow, something I usually have no patience for. Light, tweak, cut, done...next! I could do it for work but at 61 (next week) getting hired might be a bit hard.
Most of my more or less casual welding is done for some car project or another on my 1966 Mopar 440, and not wasted on one of my front wheel drive jokes.

In about another 42.25 years. I toke at bedtime and ride/run aggressively during the day and breath better than most 25 year olds who smoke cigarettes. My 23 year old grandson used to be able to outrun me for distance when he was 18 but since he has started smoking (and beer) he runs out of breath after about one block or a good 100 yard dash.

I really rag on him then since he has been outrun by a 60/61 year old.
He still smokes though.
Yep, that refined reefer I smoke is really killing my lungs.

I do it to remove any strange chemicals that may have found their way in. I started this when the government made a big deal about spraying Paraquat in Mexico so I could get it out of the weed.

I've been to Roy Rogers display ranch in Apple Valley/Victorville before it was moved. Trigger was stuffed and on display at the front door. I never met either one of them due to bad timing but in 1972 they both were there most of the days. There was a ton of stuff from his movie and television days that I remember seeing on the show so it was worth it.
My mother lived in Apple Valley anyway.

That's why I didn't join. I had 2 of them working for me as sort of junior engineers and the bad puns never stopped. They took me to one meeting and that was more than enough. A bunch of people telling bad jokes, making business deals on the side, and trying to look smarter than the rest. Entertaining, but one evening was enough. Besides, the entry requirement is only about 132.

Not enough for them to care. It's for personal use anyway. I only go to Bullshit. Funded by the government again? What a waste of an article.

Pot hurts your DNA? Tobacco hurts it worse, and even the chromosomes?
Are smokers going to morph to match their altered DNA?
It's a scare tactic concocted by the government. Nothing is going to mess with your DNA in any big way or it would kill you.

Really, really bullshit on this one. I read the article twice and there is no mention of Marijuana at all.

It isn't an issue. All of the 60's dopers are now in their 60's and it has not been called any kind of issue yet. The ones who got cancer also smoked tobacco. Many stoners did not drink either and are actually better off for having been stoners.

Comcast? I don't have a box since I don't watch much television but their channel listings channel is usually off by about 30 seconds.
Another channel that shows local weather is about 15 seconds better but neither is dead on.
I get WWV at 2.5, 5.0, 10.0, 15, 20, and 25 MHz so I get the full spread at different times of day. 2.5 and 25 are the hardest to get here.

What time of day do you receive WWV on 25 MHz? After a big toke?

25 MHz was discontinued in 1977 :-)

Considering I was walking them in groups, in public, and protecting them from the seedy element and commended by the parents, you forward anything you want to anyone you think cares. My granddaughter was in class with one of them and her classmate started coming along, then her 3 sisters and it just kind of happened. Sex was not a topic except when the now college oldest sister asked me about college and I said "No boys, no sex.". As I said she is now in college.

I remember getting it, just not when, but I do have a memory of getting it about 3 years ago on my Hammarlund HQ-129X and RME-DB20 combination.
Last night I was using the RME to amplify signals at 27 MHz and listening to all the CB'ers, amplified mikes and 1,000 watt plus kickers and all. One guy had to be close because every time he keyed he almost broke my S-meter and the rest were from much farther away.
Skip must be in.

The absolute bottom, bottom was 150 and I wasn't even paying attention that day. Do I have them framed? Shit, I tossed them like yesterday's newspaper. On 2 occasions I have aced the test and on one of those I had to argue for nearly a half hour with the psychologist that the test was wrong. It was the only question I missed and had to explain why the test was wrong. He finally got it and got on the phone to the source.

Here you will find an "inductive coupler for whips" project complete with pictures that does work well. It completely isolates the whip from the external antenna while at the same time providing coupling between the two.
A torroid version of the project is also given.

Say cuzz, I bought an Ionic Breeze thingy today at the Goodwill store www.shopgoodwill.com for $5.00.All of the little lights on top light up when I push the buttons.There is a thingy that has two bars on it, it lifts up and out for cleaning, the two bars look clean to me.Maybe somebody already cleaned the two bars thingy before they gave it to the Goodwill store.
Do those Ionic Breeze thingys really work? Do you have an Ionic Breeze?

The Lowe's store doesn't sell Ray O Vac batteries, they only sell energizer and duracell batteries.
SCREW! those damn no damn good rotten energizer and duracell batteries!!! I will wait untill next time I go to the Wal Mart Gestapo store and buy some Ray O Vac batteries.

I remember the State Times newspaper.For whatever reasons, it didn't last long, only a few years.Back in the 1960s, the Jackson Daily News merged with the Clarion Ledger.Nowadays, the Clarion Ledger is a Gannet rag. www.clarionledger.com Haw! you should see how thin and skimpy the Clarion Ledger paper newspaper is nowadays, only two sections.Except for the much thicker Sundays Clarion Ledger paper newspapers.I suppose the Thursdays paper newspapers aren't so thin and skimpy, if they still have those food store ads in there? Last Sunday, almost a week ago, I bought a Sunday Clarion Ledger newspaper for $1.75 at a Walgreen's store at McDowell Road and Robinson Road.I still haven't started reading that paper newspaper yet.

I am hell when I am well, trouble is, I stay sick all the time!

Short term memory loss, I have.Actually my Ionic Breeze has three metal bright shiney bars, aluminum or stainless steel, whatever.My key chain magnet doesn't stick to them.The only push button is an oval shaped BOOST push button.The other controls are two plastic knobs.I saw that when I was checking it out today at the Goodwill store.I reckon I forgot on my way home.I am fixin to plug it in and see what it will do.

Many years ago, I read about a guy in Florida and back in the 1920s or 1930s, he invented/built some sort of anti static device (I think I read it was an anti static device) for his home.With the device he built, there was no more dust in his home.
How did he do that?

SAN FRANCISCO - Consumer Reports magazine is taking renewed aim at a popular air purifier made by The Sharper Image two months after it fended off a libel lawsuit filed by the machineï¿½s retailer.

The magazine reports in its latest issue hitting newsstands Tuesday that Sharper Imageï¿½s Ionic Breeze Quadra Silent Air Purifier and four other similar machines fail to significantly clean the air ï¿½ but also release potentially unhealthy levels of ozone.

I waited a couple of hours untill I rolled me a cigarette.My Ionic Breeze pulled in the smoke through the front vents and pushed it out through the rear vents.If I listen closely, with everything else which makes noise turned off, I can hear it making a staticky noise.If I hold my face or hand on/close to the rear vents, I can feel it pushing/blowing air.One of the knobs says, On/G.P.

*Bakas list of accomplishments/expertise and quotes...

a) taught all the little blond girls (while under 18) to climb trees, now they are getting older and they all keep in touch...could get interesting
b) welding is for idiots but if I need to chop a chaissis for a car show its easy
c) chatting with the 14 yr old about sex right now; maybe at 18 she'll take me for a spin
d) for a more potent toke I'll attach an acetate to "juice it up"
e) my secondary degree is in chemistry you idiots
f) my 160 IQ doesn't represent how smart I am
g) I can TIG weld blindfolded
h) for $1000 lab set anyone can remake their weed
i) any more than 2 hits [of my stash] and you can't function anymore
j) cops, lawyers and judges are all drunks; we are harmless dope smokers
k) I only smoke it [dope] to sleep
l) after I refine my stash its just really potent drops of honey

We'll monitor Baka's posts and add to the growing list of buffoonery...
Well done Baka...toke on bro...55555!!!!

Wow... Ol' MS is pretty bad with the sales tax... 7%. Only CA is higher, at 7.25%, and even at that, food is exempt in CA, whereas it is not in MS.

Be happy, however, that you don't have to pay the VAT here (most countries version of sales tax), which is 10%. And we're low compared to a lot of other countries where the VAT can be as high as 25% or more..

Ex: Germany: 16% Italy: 20% Spain: 16% Sweden: 25% UK: 17.5% Ireland: 21.5%

Hello Jim,

Every type of metal wire will work for you situation (solid, stranded, plasticized galvanized washing line, etc).

Most modern SW receivers with internal antennas are very sensitive, but cannot handle strong signals, so longer will not always be better.

To reduce the interference from electronic equipment close to your SW receiver, you may put a coaxial cable between the actual antenna and the receiver. You can use any type of 75, 90 or 50 Ohms cable. The center conductor goes to the center pin of the mini plug and the bread goes to the ground of the mini plug.

The antenna side of the cable needs some clarification. The antenna wire goes to the center conductor of the cable, the braid should be connected to ground outside your house (or at least far away from where you expect or have interference).

What is "ground"? When you live in an apartment, it can be the metal fence or railing of the balcony. You can use a ground rod or any other large metallic structure outside your house. Connect the braid of the cable directly to the ground structure. Do not insert a long run of wire between the metal structure and the braid of the coaxial cable.

For some form of static / impulse protection you may add a 1… 3 uH inductor between the center conductor and the braid. Note that this inductor will attenuate AM broadcast band reception.

As others said, you have to experiment with the orientation of the wire to get best signal/noise ratio. When you are very limited in space for the wire, you may use some 5..10 feet of chicken mesh as reception antenna or use more wires in a fan shape.

No, I have Cablevision. The time is dispalyed continuously directly on

I spent a little over eight dollars at the Goodwill store yesterday, I also bought a belt and a brass strap about two feet long and an inch or two wide and a very nice reproduction of some kind of old heavy small table lamp, I will ask my sister if she wants the lamp.I weigh 160 pounds now, someday I will buy some new Dickies work pants (dark blue ones, because sometimes I leak!) at the Wal Mart Gestapo store.My old Dickies dark blue pants are sooooooooo baggy around my waist,,, it is rediculous beyond compare! Also, yesterday at the Wal Mart Gestapo store, I bought a little Shark Ultra Power Model V15Z Bagless Hand Vac (about $38.00) vacuum cleaner and some tomatos and a two liter Dr.Pepper.I forgot to buy two boxes of Nabisco Saltine crackers and some pepper and Ray O Vac batteries.I always forget something.I bought a few things at the Lowe's store too.

A couple clip leads on the whip helps sometimes. If you want to use a real antenna, you need a real radio.

If they possessed a working nuke, and planned on detonating it 25 miles in the air after smuggling it next to Germany, or Russia, or China, or the United States (or maybe all of them) destroying whole sectors of the global economy, what kind of crack are you smoking to think sanctions are going to work?

Let me guess, Omar, who makes three bushels of camel dung a year, won't get his 52" LCD screen this year and will complain to the Cromagnum Council of Elders who think television is evil? Or do the leaders of Iran want a technological sanction on all nations, throwing them back in stone age, and if a few million die, well, they were all just infidels anyway?

You should have attacked during protests?

"Struble: Radio Is the Last Analog Medium Standing"

"HD Radio portables – No one's buying a lot of transistor radios anymore. The headphone radios that people used to run around the park with are all gone, and if radio wants to continue to be a reach medium, they've got to be in the devices people carry, which increasingly are cell phones, MP3 players, personal navigation devices... Insignia HD – I think this will be a nice little interim step for jogging or working out. It proves the viability [of the technology] and hopefully we'll get sales; but no, this is not going to sell in the hundreds of thousands... Radio alone – the sad reality of where it is – as a standalone device, it just doesn't exist anymore

Great Post and I agree - iBiquity digital radio is a total flop. No one wants it, retailers can't sell it - just no need for it.

It sure causes a lot of noise on AM radio as well. One clear channel station interfering with another - what a complete failure.

You have no idea what you're talking about. You are supporting Old Media's right to block New Media traffic on the internet, (which should be a dumb, content-neutral packet delivery service and nothing more.)

Your status as a shill for corporate toadies is laid bare again.

The best one I ever had was a Thordarson Meissner, can't remember the model.
The one I always wanted, was a Hammarlund Super Pro. Now that was a radio!

I had an e-mail exchange with him in which I told him that he was a prophet the way Balaam's ass was a prophet. If God spoke through his mouth, he was, on that occasion, a prophet. Otherwise, he was just an ass.

Later on, he told the world that God had cut me off from his downloads as a sign that I was left out of the Ark, i.e., going to Hell. In reality, he'd (or someone) had fed up their web page in the course of changing the ftp site of his mp3s.

Sanctions aren't going to go anywhere because only the US wants them.
Most of the world is not interested in speeding up the Rapture, if they've even heard of it. Gog, king of Magog, is not going to be Trend to watch: Team-branded HD2s.

Sports rights holders are keen on expanding their footprint with their own dedicated media platform, an issue that's becoming more prevalent when negotiating a new deal with broadcast partners. For the Dallas Cowboys and the Pittsburgh Penguins, that has lead to their own branded 24/7 HD channels.

KRLD-HD3 bowed in April, drawing from the Cowboys' massive programming vault of coaches' interviews, pre-and post-game shows and classic games. After a soft launch September 13, last year's Stanley Cup champions drop the puck on Pittsburgh Penguins Radio Thursday at 105.9 HD2, side channel to Clear Channel alternative WXDX. "The programming will be anything but traditional," Penguins media director Mark Turley says. A six-hour block of programming will air daily from 9 a.m.-3 p.m, consisting of "Daily Players' Playlist," a "Penguins Live" talk show, Sirius XM's "NHL Live" and an hour of Penguins and NHL content. The block will be repeated throughout the day.

Turley says the Penguins hope to distribute local shows to their roughly three-dozen affiliate stations and become a syndicator themselves. According to the Sports Business Journal, the Penguins have signed a half-dozen advertisers to the channel, including Geico and Qdoba.

I saw that Balaams Ass website back in 1999.The one about that guy in Tennessee who tunes up and repairs old Pianos.I like the Music/Songs at that website.

My ten years old RCA 27 inch screen CRT screen wouldn't turn on this morning.I only used that tv set for WebTV.I hooked the WebTV cables up to my Sony Wega Trinitron 27 inch screen flat screen CRT tv set.WebTV does look better on my Sony flat screen tv set.Last week, I remember seeing some flat screen CRT tv sets for sale at some pawn shops that I like to check out once in a while.Metinks I am fixin to put my battery in my new old 1983 Dodge van rat now and head over to those pawn shops.

Fast attack and a guy blasting my rig most definitely slams my S meter harder than I want. I don't expect a bent end like I found on a Simpson voltmeter that another guy kept forgetting to change ranges on.

Hardly. It is however, much more desirable to be surrounded by cheerful and chatty girls on a walk than sitting on a couch staring at a football game.

Trying to keep all of them from getting pregnant and blowing their college chances. Amazing how people see a child molester behind every tree these days.

I climbed to the top and coached them up, not the other way. Perfect provided he ever had any...

a) hanging out with underaged girls (unethical)
b) teaching them to climb trees which is "hands on" (illegal)
c) smoking dope (illegal)
d) refining a Class 1 narcotic (illegal)
e) discussing sex with an underage girl (14 yrs old) that is unrelated

Getting them out of a house where their mother is shooting up in the bedroom is unethical??

Being above and giving a hand up is too touchy/feely?

Not smoking tobacco or drinking ethanol, legal.

I respect my lungs.

She popped up with her 16 year old boyfriend while I was out petting a cat.

Not true. I have always told them "Hands off" (legal), but the older ones know the implications of the 18 years old or else law.
There is also the point that encounters can only happen if there is a brain in there somewhere.
So far only the 19 year old attorney type meets that standard and she is in college where I want her.

Since this is shortwave I thought I would ask if anyone else has been getting signals above 15 MHz that come and go too fast to get the country? There have been some with a woman speaking English but I can't get a good signal for long enough. China or North Korea? About 8 P.M. PST in California.
I'm wondering if this could be the Communist way of spreading the word to the non-Internet junkies of the world.
